

Practitioner's Guide Obtaining Release From Immigration Detention

CATHOLIC LEGAL
IMMIGRATION
NETWORK, INC.

This guide is intended to assist lawyers and fully accredited representatives. It does not constitute legal advice, nor is it a substitute for independent analysis of the law applicable in the practitioner's jurisdiction.

Please note that the hyperlinks referenced in this advisory were last visited in May of 2018.

*Copyright 2018
The Catholic Legal Immigration Network, Inc.*

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The authors would like to thank the following individuals for their invaluable contributions to this advisory: Linus Chan, Director of the Detainee Rights Clinic, James H. Binger Center for New Americans, University of Minnesota Law School; Bradley Jenkins, BIA Pro Bono Project Manager, CLINIC; Stephen Kang, Detention Attorney, ACLU Immigrants' Rights Project; Hon. Eliza C. Klein (Ret. U.S. Immigration Judge); Katherine M. Lewis, senior associate attorney at Van Der Hout, Brigagliano & Nightingale, LLP; Laura Lunn, Detention Program Managing Attorney, Rocky Mountain Immigrant Advocacy Network; Stephen Manning, Legal Director, Innovation Law Lab; Kathleen Moccio, Visiting Assistant Clinical Professor, Detainee Rights Clinic, James H. Binger Center for New Americans, University of Minnesota Law School; Rachel Naggar, Remote Bond Project Attorney, CLINIC; Andrea Saenz, Supervising Attorney, Immigration Practice, Brooklyn Defender Services; Maureen A. Sweeney, Law School Associate Professor, Immigration Clinic, University of Maryland Carey School of Law; Michael Tan, Staff Attorney, ACLU Immigrants' Rights Project; and Claudia Valenzuela, Detention Project Director, National Immigrant Justice Center.

AUTHORS

The authors of this practice advisory are Rebecca Scholtz, Training and Legal Support Staff Attorney, and Michelle Mendez, Training and Legal Support Managing Attorney, CLINIC's Defending Vulnerable Populations Project.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

I. INTRODUCTION.....	6
II. OVERVIEW OF IMMIGRATION DETENTION AND STRATEGIES FOR RELEASE.....	8
A. Overview of Immigration Detention	8
1. When Detention Is Most Likely to Occur	8
2. What Happens When an Individual Is Taken into Immigration Detention?	8
3. Transfer of Detained Individuals	9
4. Demographics of Those in Immigration Detention	9
5. Immigration Detention Conditions	10
B. Overview of Legal Bases for Immigration Detention and Strategies for Securing Release	12
1. Discretionary Detention Under INA § 236(a).....	12
2. Mandatory Detention Under INA § 236(c).....	15
3. Detention Under INA § 235(b) of “Arriving Aliens” and Other Individuals in the Credible Fear Process	20
4. Detention Under INA § 241 for Individuals with Administratively Final Orders of Removal	24
5. Other Restrictions on Freedom – Alternatives to Detention and Orders of Supervision.....	27
C. Chart: Immigration Detention and Remedies to Seek Release	29
FIGURE 1. Immigration Detention and Remedies to Seek Release	30
III. OVERVIEW OF LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CUSTODY REDETERMINATION IN REMOVAL PROCEEDINGS.....	31
A. Which Agencies Can Set a Bond and How Can a Respondent Request Bond?	31
B. In Which Immigration Court Should a Respondent Request a Bond Hearing?	31
C. When Is the Earliest That a Detained Individual Can Request a Bond Hearing?	32
D. Bond Hearing Procedures – Representation	33
E. Bond Hearing Procedures – Separate Record	33
F. Bond Hearing Procedures – Evidence	34
G. Bond Amounts	35

H. Case Law on Adjudication of Bond Redetermination Requests	35
1. Burden of Proof	35
2. Relevant Factors	36
3. Flight Risk Determinations	38
4. Consideration of Respondent’s Ability to Pay in Setting Bond Amount	38
5. The Government’s Use of Deterrence as a Bond Factor	39
6. BIA Cases on Bond	40
IV. NUTS AND BOLTS OF BOND PROCEEDINGS	46
A. Bond Hearing Preparation	46
1. Working with Detained Clients	47
2. Records Gathering and Fact Development.....	49
3. Submitting Documents in Advance of the Bond Hearing.....	52
4. Hearing Preparation	55
5. Mitigating Harmful Evidence, Facts, or Allegations Suggesting Dangerousness	59
B. Bond Hearing Practice Tips	69
C. Post Bond Hearing Considerations	71
1. Paying the Bond	71
2. Result of Release on Bond	72
3. Getting Bond Money Back at the Conclusion of the Removal Case	73
4. Voluntary Departure in Detention	74
5. Bond Revocation	74
6. Second or Successive Requests for Bond Redetermination.....	74
V. BOND APPEALS	76
A. Legal Overview of Bond Appeals	76
1. Bond Appeals Generally.....	76
2. Automatic Stays of an IJ’s Bond Decision	77
3. Discretionary Stays of an IJ’s Bond Decision	78
B. Nuts and Bolts of the Bond Appeal Process.....	78
1. Initial Considerations Prior to Filing the Appeal	78
2. Filing the Bond Appeal	79
3. Appeal Brief, Processing, and Decision	80
VI. CONCLUSION.....	82

For sample materials, visit cliniclegal.org/resources/bond-guide.

I. INTRODUCTION¹

Individuals in removal proceedings—otherwise known as respondents²—face high stakes and substantial hurdles in obtaining relief due to the complexity of immigration law and the fact that many of them undergo this process unrepresented.³ These hurdles are compounded for those detained during removal proceedings. Detained cases are a scheduling priority in immigration court.⁴ Priority scheduling means that detained cases are placed on a fast track, which gives respondents less time to find representation and prepare the case. But apart from the time pressure, those in immigration detention also face hurdles in preparing their cases given the inherent difficulties in communicating with the outside world, accessing legal materials, and securing legal representation.⁵ An individual's ability to fight his or her case effectively significantly increases if he or she obtains release from detention.⁶

Whether an individual is placed into removal proceedings is a decision subject to the Department of Homeland Security's (DHS) discretion. Likewise, whether or not a respondent will be detained is often a discretionary decision made by the agency. In the current era of increased enforcement, more individuals are considered a "priority" for the initiation of removal proceedings.⁷ Immigration enforcement against "collateral" individuals

1 This guide is intended to assist lawyers and fully accredited representatives. It does not constitute legal advice, nor is it a substitute for independent analysis of the law applicable in the practitioner's jurisdiction. Please note that the hyperlinks referenced in this advisory were last visited in May of 2018.

2 An individual in removal proceedings is known as the respondent. See Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR), Immigration Court Practice Manual Ch. 4.3, www.justice.gov/eoir/office-chief-immigration-judge-0 [hereinafter "Immigration Court Practice Manual"]. In general, this guide employs the terms "individual," "client," "respondent," or, less frequently, "non-citizen." This guide uses "non-citizen" less frequently because some individuals apprehended or detained by the Department of Homeland Security are U.S. citizens or have a U.S. citizenship claim.

3 See, e.g., Ingrid Eagly & Steven Shafer, American Immigration Council, Access to Counsel in Immigration Court, at 5 (Sept. 2016), www.americanimmigrationcouncil.org/sites/default/files/research/access_to_counsel_in_immigration_court.pdf (noting in September 2016 study that 37 percent of all individuals were represented in removal proceedings, and only 14 percent of detained individuals were represented).

4 See Memorandum from MaryBeth Keller, Chief Immigration Judge, EOIR, Case Processing Priorities (Jan. 31, 2017), www.justice.gov/sites/default/files/pages/attachments/2017/01/31/caseprocessingpriorities.pdf (noting that detained individuals are a docketing priority).

5 See, e.g., Kyle Kim, Immigrants Held in Remote ICE Facilities Struggle to Find Legal Aid Before They're Deported, LOS ANGELES TIMES, Sept. 28, 2017, www.latimes.com/projects/la-na-access-to-counsel-deportation/.

6 For one story about how an individual's release from detention allowed him to successfully fight his case, see Mark Hwang, American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), How a Bond Hearing Saved Me from Deportation, (Oct. 3, 2017), www.aclu.org/blog/immigrants-rights/deportation-and-due-process/how-bond-hearing-saved-me-deportation.

7 See Enhancing Public Safety in the Interior of the United States, Exec. Order No. 13768, 82 Fed. Reg. 8799, § 5 (Jan. 25, 2017), www.whitehouse.gov/presidential-actions/executive-order-enhancing-public-safety-interior-united-states/ (listing expansive not deemed an enforcement priority is on the rise,⁸ and the administration has encouraged increased use of immigration detention.⁹ Practitioners must be prepared to present persuasive arguments for their clients' release from immigration detention. Furthermore, increased detention creates an increased need for pro bono lawyers who can represent individuals in bond proceedings. Being able to secure pro bono representation means that low income individuals do not have to face the difficult choice between using limited funds to pay either legal fees or the bond. While both newly developed and long established pro bono and free legal services programs exist in locations throughout the country, these programs only cover a small percentage of detained individuals and some, such as EOIR's Legal Orientation Program (LOP), are limited to providing information, not individual representation.¹⁰ As detention becomes more widespread and detention centers multiply, more pro bono programs and representation will be essential.

The aim of this guide is to provide practitioners with a comprehensive resource for representing clients in immigration bond proceedings.¹¹ This guide focuses on bond hearings for adults who are detained by DHS. It does not cover bond hearings in children's cases.¹²

Section II of this guide provides an overview of immigration detention, including the various statutory bases for detention and corresponding strategies for seeking release. Section III gives a legal overview of bond procedures in removal proceedings. Section IV discusses the nuts and bolts of preparing for and representing a client during a bond hearing. Section V discusses appeals of immigration court bond decisions to the Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA). The guide includes sample materials that may be of use in preparing bond cases. Find them at cliniclegal.org/resources/bond-guide.

enforcement priorities) [hereinafter "Exec. Order No. 13768"]; Memorandum from John Kelly, Sec'y of DHS, Enforcement of the Immigration Laws to Serve the National Interest § A (Feb. 20, 2017), www.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/publications/17_0220_S1_Enforcement-of-the-Immigration-Laws-to-Serve-the-National-Interest.pdf [hereinafter "Kelly Memo"].

8 See, e.g., Alan Gomez, ICE Director Says His Agents Are Just Getting Started, USA TODAY, Aug. 17, 2017, www.usatoday.com/story/news/world/2017/08/17/ice-director-says-his-agents-just-getting-started/576702001/ (noting sharp increase in arrest numbers due in part to sanctioning of collateral arrests under Trump administration).

9 See U.S. Immigration & Customs Enforcement, Budget Overview: Fiscal Year 2018, Congressional Justification, at 17-18, www.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/publications/CFO/17_0524_U.S._Immigration_and_Customs_Enforcement.pdf (requesting an increase in detention capacity to 51,379 beds and an increase in detention spending of approximately $1.2 billion to "manage an increased detainee population resulting from migrant flow at the southern border and the additional apprehensions resulting from implementation of [executive order 13768]") [hereinafter "ICE 2018 Budget Justification"]; id. at 135 (noting that "in just the first six weeks since the issuance of the implementation guidance, the number of beds used to house aliens stemming from interior enforcement efforts increased by over 2,000, representing a 12 percent increase").

10 Some examples of programs that assist individuals in bond proceedings include Capital Area Immigrants' Rights Coalition, Rocky Mountain Immigrant Advocacy Network, The Florence Project, and Southeast Immigrant Freedom Initiative. See also EOIR, Legal Orientation Program, www.justice.gov/eoir/legal-orientation-program (last updated Apr. 25, 2018). Some of the legal orientation programs have the capacity to represent individuals in bond proceedings or make referrals for pro bono bond representation.

11 This guide does not cover voluntary departure bonds. In some cases, an IJ will require a respondent to post a bond as a condition of the grant of voluntary departure. The regulations and procedures relating to voluntary departure bonds differ from those discussed in this guide.

12 In 2017, the Ninth Circuit in Flores v. Sessions, 862 F.3d 863 (9th Cir. 2017), recognized the right to bond hearings for children in the custody of the Office of Refugee Resettlement. For a practice advisory authored by Flores plaintiffs' counsel on representing detained immigrant children in bond proceedings, see Ctr. for Human Rights & Constitutional Law, Bond Hearings for Youth in Immigration-Related Custody (Sept. 6, 2017), centerforhumanrights.org/PDFs/Flores_Para24A_PracticeAdvisory090617.pdf [hereinafter "CHRCCL Flores Advisory"].

II. OVERVIEW OF IMMIGRATION DETENTION AND STRATEGIES FOR RELEASE

A. OVERVIEW OF IMMIGRATION DETENTION

1. When Detention Is Most Likely to Occur

Individuals are detained by DHS in a variety of circumstances.¹³ Some are apprehended soon after crossing the border without inspection, or after presenting themselves at a port of entry seeking asylum. Many are detained due to contact with a state or local criminal justice system. For example, an individual might be arrested for a traffic offense, booked into jail, and upon release from state or local custody be transferred into Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) custody. The Trump administration has promoted increased state and local law enforcement cooperation with ICE through the use of such initiatives as “Secure Communities” and agreements under section 287(g) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA).¹⁴ Other individuals end up in immigration detention as a result of ICE enforcement actions, such as encounters at the home or workplace.

2. What Happens When an Individual Is Taken into Immigration Detention?

After an individual is arrested by DHS, an officer must make a custody decision: detain the individual, release the individual with conditions (including bond), or release the individual without conditions (called release on recognizance). When DHS apprehends the individual, DHS typically transfers him or her to a DHS facility, usually an ICE Enforcement and Removal Operations (ERO) field office or sub-office, for processing.¹⁵ During 13 A 2006 report from the DHS Office of Inspector General (OIG) lists the types of DHS apprehensions as including apprehension by ICE of individuals who are unlawfully present, persons apprehended by Customs and Border Patrol (CBP) at ports of entry or having entered unlawfully between ports of entry, those incarcerated in state or federal criminal custody, and those denied asylum by USCIS. DHS OIG, Detention and Removal of Illegal Aliens, OIG 06-33, at 28-29 (Apr. 2006), www.oig.dhs.gov/assets/Mgmt/OIG_06-33_Apr06.pdf.

14 See Exec. Order No. 13768, supra note 7, §§ 8, 10; Kelly Memo, supra note 7, § B; ICE, Secure Communities, www.ice.gov/secure-communities (last updated Mar. 20, 2018); see also TRACImmigration, Use of ICE Detainers: Obama v. Trump (Aug. 30, 2017), trac.syr.edu/immigration/reports/479/.

15 Processing may also take place at other locations, such as the state criminal detention facility where the individual is incarcerated for processing, officers interview, fingerprint, and photograph the individual, and make a custody determination based on factors such as criminal history, prior removal data, visa violations, community ties, and alleged gang affiliation.¹⁶ If DHS decides to detain the individual, the individual may be detained at a facility relatively close to his or her home or DHS may transfer the individual to a detention center anywhere in the country.

3. Transfer of Detained Individuals

ICE may transfer an individual multiple times and without advance warning.¹⁷ ICE's transfer policy, which is apparently still in effect as of the date of this guide's issuance, describes transfer criteria and requirements. Some practitioners have reported that ICE frequently does not comply with the policy. The policy directs that detained individuals should generally not be transferred if they have immediate family, an attorney of record, or pending removal proceedings in the jurisdiction, or have been granted bond or scheduled for a bond hearing.¹⁸ Nevertheless, there are a number of exceptions to this policy. Special transfer rules also apply to those protected by the Orantes injunction, which covers Salvadorans detained by DHS who are eligible to apply for asylum.¹⁹ ICE's decision to transfer a client can make legal representation more challenging, particularly where ICE moves the client far away from the representative or the client's family and friends, who might otherwise be able to assist with the case.²⁰ With ICE's plan to increase the number of immigration beds nationwide, it is possible those placed in the "institutional removal program." See, e.g., Memorandum from John P. Torres, Acting Dir., Office of Detention & Removal Operations, Detention and Deportation Officer's Field Manual Update: Chapter 1, at 26 (Mar. 27, 2006), www.ice.gov/doclib/foia/dro_policy_memos/09684drofieldpolicymanual.pdf.

- 16 See U.S. Gov't Accountability Office (GAO), Report to Congressional Committees: Alternatives to Detention, Improved Data Collection and Analyses Needed to Better Assess Program Effectiveness, at 8 (Nov. 2014), www.gao.gov/assets/670/666911.pdf (describing the ICE Risk Classification Assessment tool, which "recommends each alien for detention or release" and is then reviewed by an ICE officer "along with other factors," after which the ICE officer makes a custody determination with supervisory approval).
- 17 DHS is to inform the detained individual "immediately prior to transfer" and to provide notice within 24 hours of the transfer to an individual's representative, if any. ICE, Policy 11022.1: Detainee Transfers § 5.3 (Jan. 4, 2012), www.ice.gov/doclib/detention-reform/pdf/hd-detainee-transfers.pdf (directing that ICE inform the representative of the transfer "as soon as practicable on the day of the transfer, but in no circumstances later than twenty four (24) hours after the transfer occurs") [hereinafter "ICE Transfer Policy"].
- 18 See id. § 5.2(3) (noting exceptions including transfers for medical or mental health reasons, based on detainee request, "[f]or the safety and security of the detainee, other detainees, detention personnel or any ICE employee," for the agency's convenience when the venue of detention is different than the immigration court venue, due to termination of facility use, to prevent overcrowding, and "[t]o transfer to a more appropriate detention facility based on the detainee's individual circumstances and risk factors"). The ICE National Detainee Handbook provides that a detained individual may request transfer to another facility if the current detention facility does not have outdoor recreation opportunities. ICE ERO, National Detainee Handbook, at 11 (Apr. 2016), www.ice.gov/sites/default/files/documents/Document/2017/detainee-handbook.PDF ("If your facility has no outdoor recreation, you may be eligible to request voluntary transfer to another facility with outdoor recreation after a certain number of months (ask your ICE officer).").
- 19 Orantes-Hernandez v. Meese, 685 F. Supp. 1488, 1491 (C.D. Cal. 1988), aff'd., 919 F.2d 549 (9th Cir. 1990), created a nationwide permanent injunction upholding the rights of Salvadorans detained by DHS who are eligible to apply for asylum. The injunction requires DHS to comply with a number of requirements, including permitting access to counsel, placing limits on the transfer of unrepresented individuals in immigration detention, and providing access to legal materials. If an advocate believes an Orantes violation has occurred, he or she can contact class counsel, the National Immigration Law Center (NILC). See NILC, The Orantes Injunction (Mar. 2011), www.nilc.org/issues/immigrationenforcement/orantesinjunction/.
- 20 For more information about the harmful effects of transfer of individuals in immigration detention, see Human Rights Watch, A Costly Move: Far and Frequent Transfers Impede Hearings for Immigrant Detainees in the United States (June 2011), www.hrw.org/sites/default/files/reports/us0611webwcover.pdf; Letter to Carlton I. Mann, Assistant Inspector General, DHS OIG, from ACLU, that transfers will become more common as more bed options are available.

4. Demographics of Those in Immigration Detention

The immigration detention system encompasses many different populations, including men, women, children present with or without their parents,²¹ pregnant women,²² nursing mothers, and those with serious medical and mental health conditions.²³ The immigration detention system also erroneously catches U.S. citizens in its wide net.²⁴ ICE anticipates detaining an even higher number of individuals in Fiscal Year 2018 than past years “as a result of increased interior enforcement activity resulting from [executive order] 13768.”²⁵

5. Immigration Detention Conditions

The types of detention centers where ICE holds individuals, and the conditions at those facilities, vary. Some individuals are held in state or local jails that contract with ICE and receive payment for each immigration bed they offer.²⁶ Others are held in facilities run by ICE. Still others are detained in facilities run by private for-profit prison companies.²⁷

Human Rights Watch, AILA & National Immigrant Justice Center, DHS OIG Audit of Immigration Detainee Transfers and Impact on Legal Representation (Feb. 6, 2009), www.aclu.org/sites/default/files/field_document/Transfer_Recommendations_for_DHS_OIG_2-6-09_final__2_.pdf (providing recommendations for amendments to previous detention standards related to transfer and describing harmful impacts of transfer). Note that these sources predate the ICE Transfer Policy, see supra note 17.

21 Many aspects of the detention of non-citizen children are governed by the Flores Settlement Agreement, about which two federal court decisions were issued in 2017: Flores v. Sessions, 862 F.3d 863 (9th Cir. 2017); Flores v. Sessions, No. CV 85-4544 (C.D. Cal. June 27, 2017) (order re plaintiffs’ motion to enforce and appoint a special monitor). The legal framework for, and practices governing the release of, children in immigration detention is beyond the scope of this guide. For more information on immigration detention of children, see Immigrant Legal Resource Center, Practice Alert on Flores v. Sessions (July 2017), www.ilrc.org/sites/default/files/resources/flores_v_sessions_practice_alert_final.pdf; CHRCL Flores Advisory, supra note 12. Children and youth in immigration detention may find themselves facing unsubstantiated allegations of criminality or gang affiliation. See Anita Chabria, Feds Failed to Prove Undocumented Teens Sent to Jail Were Gang Members, Officials Say, SACRAMENTO BEE, Aug. 26, 2017, www.sacbee.com/news/local/article169472962.html.

22 ICE, Directive 11032.3: Identification and Monitoring of Pregnant Detainees (Dec. 14, 2017), www.ice.gov/directive-identification-and-monitoring-pregnant-detainees; see American Immigration Council, Increasing Numbers of Pregnant Women Facing Harm in Detention (Sept. 26, 2017), americanimmigrationcouncil.org/advocacy/detained-pregnant-women (linking to administrative complaint filed by immigrant rights groups, prior to December 2017 ICE directive superseding previous policy generally against detaining pregnant women).

23 ICE news releases describe the deaths of detained individuals in its custody including those with serious medical conditions. See, e.g., ICE, News Releases, www.ice.gov/news/all.

24 See, e.g., Eyder Peralta, You Say You’re an American, But What If You Had to Prove It or Be Deported?, NATIONAL PUBLIC RADIO, Dec. 22, 2016, www.npr.org/sections/thetwo-way/2016/12/22/504031635/you-say-you-re-an-american-but-what-if-you-had-to-prove-it-or-be-deported.

25 ICE 2018 Budget Justification, supra note 9, at 133.

26 It has been reported that the Trump administration plans to expand its use of state and local jail facilities by paying them to hold non-citizens who are set to be released from state or local custody, “sign[ing] a contract that pays the sheriff’s department a daily fee to hold the immigrant until ICE can take the person into custody.” See Caitlin Dickerson, Trump Administration Moves to Expand Deportation Dragnet to Jails, N.Y. TIMES, Aug. 21, 2017, www.nytimes.com/2017/08/21/us/sheriffs-immigration-jails.html?mcubz=3. As with the use of immigration detainers, advocates have questioned the legality of such practices. See id.

27 For a report on DHS’s use of private prisons, see ACLU, Shutting Down the Profiteers: Why and How the Department of Homeland Security Should Stop Using Private Prisons (Sept. 2016), www.aclu.org/report/shutting-down-profiteers-why-and-how-department

- Immigrant and human rights groups have condemned the conditions of immigration detention facilities,²⁸ including:
- the use of solitary confinement as a means of punishment or to “protect” vulnerable populations²⁹
- substandard medical care³⁰
- deaths of individuals while in immigration detention³¹
- insufficient access to counsel and/or lack of legal orientation programs³²
- lack of access to a law library³³
- the harmful psychological effects of detention,³⁴ and homeland-security-should-stop-using-private?utm_source=aaila.org&utm_medium=InfoNet%20Search.

- 28 See, e.g., Penn State Law Center for Immigrants’ Rights Clinic, Imprisoned Justice: Inside Two Georgia Immigrant Detention Centers (May 2017), projectsouth.org/wp-content/uploads/2017/06/Imprisoned_Justice_Report-1.pdf (discussing concerns with detention conditions at two Georgia immigration detention facilities). A December 2017 DHS OIG report inspecting five facilities raised concerns about detainee treatment at four of them, which “undermine the protection of detainees’ rights, their humane treatment, and the provision of a safe and healthy environment.” DHS OIG, Concerns about ICE Detainee Treatment and Care at Detention Facilities, OIG-18-32, at 3 (Dec. 11, 2017), www.oig.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/assets/2017-12/OIG-18-32-Dec17.pdf. A discussion of administrative and federal court mechanisms to challenge detention conditions is beyond the scope of this guide. For general resources, see, for example, Trina A. Realmuto, American Immigration Law Foundation & National Immigration Project of the National Lawyers Guild, Practice Advisory: Whom to Sue and Whom to Serve in Immigration-Related District Court Litigation (May 13, 2010), www.americanimmigrationcouncil.org/sites/default/files/practice_advisory/lac_pa_040706.pdf; Priya Patel, National Immigration Project of the National Lawyers Guild, Federal Tort Claims Act: Frequently Asked Questions for Immigration Attorneys (Jan. 24, 2013), nationalimmigrationproject.org/PDFs/practitioners/practice_advisories/fed/2013_24Jan_ftca-faq.pdf; Practising Law Institute, On-Demand Web Programs, FTCA and Other Civil Rights Claims - Immigration Enforcement & Damages Actions (Aug. 25, 2017), free web program available at www.pli.edu/Content/Seminar/FTCA_and_Other_Civil_Rights_Claims_Immigration/_N-4kZ1z102h9?ID=318799%20-%20AddCartPopupJump#AddCartPopupJump.
- 29 See ICE, Policy 11065.1, Review of the Use of Segregation for ICE Detainees (Sept. 4, 2013), www.ice.gov/doclib/detention-reform/pdf/segregation_directive.pdf; DHS OIG, ICE Field Offices Need to Improve Compliance with Oversight Requirements for Segregation of Detainees with Mental Health Conditions, OIG-17-119 (Sept. 29, 2017), www.oig.dhs.gov/reports/2017/ice-field-offices-need-improve-compliance-oversight-requirements-segregation-detainees.
- 30 See, e.g., Human Rights Watch & Civic, Systemic Indifference: Dangerous and Substandard Medical Care in U.S. Immigration Detention (2017), www.hrw.org/sites/default/files/report_pdf/usimmigration0517_web_0.pdf.
- 31 See id.; see also AILA, Deaths at Adult Detention Centers, AILA Doc. No. 16050900, www.aaila.org/infonet/deaths-at-adult-detention-centers?utm_source=aaila.org&utm_medium=InfoNet%20Search (compiling list of ICE press releases announcing deaths of detained individuals) (last updated Apr. 12, 2018); Paloma Esquivel, “We Don’t Feel OK Here”: Detainee Deaths, Suicide Attempts and Hunger Strikes Plague California Immigration Facility, LOS ANGELES TIMES, Aug. 8, 2017, www.latimes.com/local/lanow/la-me-ln-adelanto-detention-20170808-story.html.
- 32 See National Sign-On Letter on Detention Reforms (Apr. 4, 2013), AILA Doc. No. 13041047, www.aaila.org/advo-media/aaila-correspondence/2013/national-sign-on-letter-on-detention-reforms?utm_source=aaila.org&utm_medium=InfoNet%20Search (noting at the time that Legal Orientation Programs (LOP) were available in 24 facilities, with over 200 facilities lacking an LOP program).
- 33 See, e.g., Southern Poverty Law Center, Detention Center Must Provide Detained Immigrants with Law Library Access (Aug. 22, 2017), www.splcenter.org/news/2017/08/22/splc-detention-center-must-provide-detained-immigrants-law-library-access (describing how detained individuals held at a Folkston, Georgia detention center, run by the for-profit prison company Geo Group, are denied adequate access to the law library).
- 34 CARA Family Detention Pro Bono Project Complaint to the DHS Office of Civil Rights and Civil Liberties and OIG, Ongoing Concerns Regarding the Detention and Fast-Track Removal of Children and Mothers Experiencing Symptoms of Trauma (Mar. 28, 2016), www.aaila.org/advo-media/press-releases/2016/cara-crcl-complaint-concerns-regarding-detention.

- violation of wage and hour laws and involuntary labor through the “voluntary work program.”³⁵

ICE adopted “Performance-Based National Detention Standards” that purport “to tailor the conditions of immigration detention to [ICE’s] unique purpose while maintaining a safe and secure detention environment for staff and detainees” within ICE’s detention system.³⁶ ICE does not apply these standards at all immigration detention facilities.³⁷ Although the standards were in effect and applied at some facilities at the time of this guide’s issuance, a 2015 U.S. Commission on Civil Rights report documented ICE’s failure to adhere to the standards in some cases.³⁸ Furthermore, the Trump administration has signaled plans to revise and “streamline” the standards in order “to obtain the increased detention space needed to meet the requirements of the [executive order].”³⁹

B. OVERVIEW OF LEGAL BASES FOR IMMIGRATION DETENTION AND STRATEGIES FOR SECURING RELEASE

This section briefly discusses the different detention authorities found in the INA and the classes of individuals to which each pertains.⁴⁰ Four primary statutory grounds exist under which DHS has authority to detain an individual. Some statutory grounds authorize mandatory detention, meaning that the immigration judge (IJ) has no authority to re-determine the person’s custody or to set a bond. The strategies available for an individual to seek release will depend on which classification he or she falls into. While this guide primarily focuses on how to prepare and present an effective case for bond in immigration court, this section also gives a brief overview of other strategies for seeking release.

1. Discretionary Detention Under INA § 236(a)

Section 236(a) of the INA governs the detention of individuals who are arrested in the interior of the United States and placed in removal proceedings, and who are not subject to the mandatory detention provisions of 35 See, e.g., Mia Steinle, Project on Government Oversight, Slave Labor Widespread at ICE Detention Centers, Lawyers Say (Sept. 7, 2017), <http://www.pogo.org/our-work/articles/2017/slave-labor-widespread-at-immigration-detention-centers-lawyers-say.html?referrer=https://www.facebook.com/>.

36 See ICE, 2011 Operations Manual Performance-Based National Detention Standards, www.ice.gov/detention-standards/2011 (providing 2016 standards and links to 2008 and 2011 versions, as well as to the 2000 Detention Standards). The standards were never issued in the form of regulations or through formal rulemaking.

37 ICE, Progress in Implementing 2011 PBNDS Standards and DHS PREA Requirements at Detention Facilities, at 5-6 (Jan. 17, 2017), www.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/publications/ICE%20-%20Progress%20in%20Implementing%202011%20PBNDS%20Standards.pdf (noting that as of the report’s issuance date, ICE implemented the standards at 28 facilities, representing 60 percent of the total detained population).

38 U.S. Comm’n on Civil Rights, Statutory Enforcement Report: The State of Civil Rights at Immigration Detention Facilities, at 44 (Sept. 2015), www.usccr.gov/pubs/Statutory_Enforcement_Report2015.pdf.

39 ICE 2018 Budget Justification, supra note 9, at 138 (noting that “many State and local partners are unable or unwilling to meet ICE’s detention standards, leaving some ICE field offices with few, if any, options for detention space”).

40 In addition to the detention authority discussed herein, there are other situations in which individuals held in immigration detention are not eligible to seek bond with the immigration court, including those in asylum-only proceedings who were admitted pursuant to the Visa Waiver Program and have not been served with a Notice to Appear, see Matter of A-W-, 25 I&N Dec. 45 (BIA 2009), and detention of certain suspected terrorists, see 8 USC § 236a. Further discussion of these forms of detention is beyond the scope of this guide.

section 236(c) that are discussed below. This provision may be characterized as describing DHS's discretionary, or permissive, detention authority. This is the general detention authority. The statute provides that "[o]n a warrant issued by the Attorney General, an alien may be arrested and detained pending a decision on whether the alien is to be removed from the United States." It further directs that the Attorney General may continue to detain the individual, or may release the individual on either a "bond of at least $1,500 with security approved by, and containing conditions prescribed by, the Attorney General,"⁴¹ or on conditional parole.⁴²

If an individual is detained under section 236(a), there are two principal fora where he or she may seek release:

- An individual can seek release at any time from ICE ERO, and
- An individual may seek release from an IJ after ICE makes its initial custody determination by requesting a custody redetermination hearing asking for a lower bond or release on conditional parole. IJ release strategies are discussed in sections III and IV.

Negotiating Release with ERO. When ICE first arrests an individual and chooses to detain him or her, ICE either sets a bond amount or decides that the individual should not be released under any amount – usually indicated on Form I-286, Notice of Custody Determination. In increasingly rare situations, such as those presenting compelling humanitarian factors, practitioners may be able to negotiate with ICE ERO to set a bond or lower the bond amount set. Since ICE has discretion to detain or release those apprehended under section 236(a),⁴³ a practitioner's first advocacy strategy may be to try to persuade ERO not to detain the client in the first place. However, before embarking on this time-consuming effort, practitioners should consider the likelihood of the ERO field office's exercising discretion to release the client given the Trump administration's public commitment to detention and removal. Practitioners may wish to reach out to other knowledgeable practitioners in their jurisdiction to learn about the local ERO office's inclination toward such requests and the likelihood of success.

If a practitioner decides to approach ERO, he or she might ask the agency to release the individual on his or her own recognizance, or negotiate the setting of a low bond that the client is able to pay right away.⁴⁴ This is best accomplished as soon as possible, for example by speaking with the deportation officer while the client is being processed.⁴⁵ To communicate with ERO personnel about a client, the practitioner will need to submit a Form G-28 preferably signed by both the client and the representative.⁴⁶ Practitioners can contact the local ERO

41 One example of a release condition that might be prescribed is participation in an alcohol treatment program for a respondent with a history of driving under the influence. See, e.g., E-C-, AXXX XXX 516 (BIA Apr. 20, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/349318995/E-C-AXXX-XXX-516-Bia-April-20-2017.

42 INA § 236(a)(2)(B).

43 See 8 CFR § 1236.1(c)(8) (noting that the DHS officer "may, in the officer's discretion, release an alien not described in section 236(c)(1) of the Act . . . provided that the alien must demonstrate to the satisfaction of the officer that such release would not pose a danger to property or persons, and that the alien is likely to appear for any future proceeding").

44 For more information about paying bond, see section IV.C.1 infra.

45 The regulations direct DHS to make a determination within 48 hours of arrest whether the individual "will be continued in custody or released on bond or recognizance and whether a notice to appear and warrant of arrest . . . will be issued." 8 CFR § 287.3(d).

46 It is wise for practitioners to have an undated, signed G-28 on file for all clients so that they do not face time-consuming additional hurdles in the event of the client's detention. In some jurisdictions, practitioners have reported that ICE will accept a Form G-28 for a detained individual signed only by the representative. This was reportedly national ICE policy at least under the Obama administration. See AILA Infonet, AILA ICE Liaison Committee Meeting Minutes (Apr. 10, 2014), AILA Doc. No. 14102844, office or talk to local colleagues to learn the best way of submitting Form G-28, including the availability of fax or e-mail options.⁴⁷ Once the practitioner has submitted Form G-28, he or she may also request a copy of the client's Notice to Appear or other immigration documents in ICE's possession; ICE may or may not respond to such a request.⁴⁸

In making a persuasive case to ERO for the client's release, practitioners may submit a packet to the deportation officer, describing why the client would not pose a danger or flight risk if released, and including any evidence of positive equities and humanitarian factors weighing in favor of release. Factors in arguing that a client is not dangerous or a flight risk include:

- Lack of prior criminal history or immigration violations
- Family members in the United States with lawful immigration status, with whom the client would live if released
- Community ties, such as religious activities or volunteering
- Length of time in the United States
- Existence of any potential immigration relief
- The client's ability to pay bond, and
- Any other humanitarian factors, such as the person's status as the primary caregiver for young children or individuals with health issues and the person's own medical or mental health conditions.⁴⁹

www.aila.org/infonet. In areas where the detained client's signature is not required, it is advisable to write "Detained" in the client's signature line.

47 A list of ICE ERO offices can be found on the ICE website, www.ice.gov/contact/ero (last updated Jan. 3, 2018). Local ERO offices often share the list of officers and their contact information with legal orientation programs and AILA liaisons, so practitioners may want to reach out to local LOP or AILA liaison contacts to obtain contact information. If a practitioner is not able to obtain specific officer contact information or a mechanism for submitting the Form G-28 via fax or e-mail, it may be wise to make the trip to ERO in person to submit the Form G-28.

48 If ICE will not turn over documents, the practitioner can, where useful, explain to the IJ during proceedings the efforts he or she has made to move the matter forward by seeking the documents. See also American Immigration Council, Practice Advisory: Dent v. Holder and Strategies for Obtaining Documents from the Government During Removal Proceedings (June 12, 2012), www.americanimmigrationcouncil.org/sites/default/files/practice_advisory/dent_practice_advisory_6-8-12.pdf.

49 See section III infra for other aspects of dangerousness and flight risk analysis. In previous administrations, agency memoranda were issued listing non-exclusive factors that could be considered in DHS's exercise of prosecutorial discretion. While the February 2017 Kelly Memo laying out broad enforcement priorities states that "all existing conflicting directives, memoranda, or field guidance regarding the enforcement of our immigration laws and priorities for removal are hereby immediately rescinded—to the extent of the conflict," Kelly Memo, supra note 7, at 2, the prior memoranda identify factors that practitioners could argue remain relevant to the exercise of prosecutorial discretion. Practitioners may want to include a cover letter referencing these memos and linking the facts of the client's specific case to these factors, along with providing documentation. See, e.g., Memorandum from Jeh Johnson, DHS Sec'y, Policies for the Apprehension, Detention and Removal of Undocumented Immigrants, at 6 (Nov. 20, 2014), www.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/publications/14_1120_memo_prosecutorial_discretion.pdf (citing factors including "extenuating circumstances involving the offense of conviction; extended length of time since the offense of conviction; length of time in the United States; military service; family or community ties in the United States; status as a victim, witness or plaintiff in civil or criminal proceedings; or compelling humanitarian factors such as poor health, age, pregnancy, a young child, or a seriously ill relative"); Memorandum from John Morton, ICE Dir., Exercising Prosecutorial Discretion Consistent with the Civil Immigration Enforcement Priorities of the Agency for the Apprehension, Detention, and Removal of Aliens, at 4-5 (June 17, 2011), www.ice.gov.

If applicable, the request could state that the client consents to release on reasonable conditions of supervision, including an electronic monitoring device (if the client has consented to that). Practitioners making release requests to ERO, who will likely be operating under significant time pressure, should take care to avoid introducing declarations or other evidence into the record unless they have been carefully vetted for accuracy to ensure that they will not create future problems in the case.

In addition to seeking release with ERO and through an IJ custody redetermination hearing, discussed in sections III and IV below, it may be possible to challenge the constitutionality of an individual's prolonged detention under section 236(a) through a habeas petition filed in federal district court.⁵⁰ This could be explored where, for example, the IJ denied bond due to dangerousness and the individual seeks a new bond hearing where the government bears the burden to prove dangerousness, or where the individual could not afford to pay the bond amount set by the IJ.⁵¹ A discussion of habeas is beyond the scope of this guide.⁵²

2. Mandatory Detention Under INA § 236(c)

Section 236(c) of the INA directs that non-citizens with certain criminal convictions “shall [be] take[n] into custody” when “released” from criminal custody, unless they fall within a narrow exception allowing for release for witness protection purposes.⁵³ That section specifies the categories of individuals who are subject to this provision, as follows:

- Those inadmissible for having “committed any offense” covered in INA § 212(a)(2) [which includes those “convicted of, or who admit[] having committed, or who admit[] committing acts which constitute the essential elements of” a crime involving moral turpitude not falling within the petty offense exception or a controlled substance offense; and those convicted of two or more offenses for which the aggregate sentences to confinement were five years or more⁵⁴]

gov/doclib/secure-communities/pdf/prosecutorial-discretion-memo.pdf (listing factors); Memorandum from John Morton, ICE Dir., Prosecutorial Discretion: Certain Victims, Witnesses, and Plaintiffs (June 17, 2011), www.ice.gov/doclib/foia/prosecutorial-discretion/certain-victims-witnesses-plaintiffs.pdf; Memorandum from Julie L. Myers, Ass't DHS Sec'y, Prosecutorial and Custody Discretion (Nov. 7, 2007), www.ice.gov/doclib/foia/prosecutorial-discretion/custody-pd.pdf (discussing nursing mothers).

50 Practitioners seeking federal court habeas relief will need to craft arguments to avoid the jurisdictional bar to review of discretionary detention decisions found at INA § 236(e).

51 See, e.g., Hernandez v. Sessions, 872 F.3d 976 (9th Cir. 2017) (concluding that IJs in bond proceedings must consider a respondent's ability to pay as well as amenability to release on alternatives to detention), discussed at section III.H.4 infra.

52 For further information on challenges to immigration detention, see ACLU, Challenging Detention Without a Bond Hearing Pending Removal Proceedings (Feb. 2018), www.aclu.org/fact-sheet/challenging-detention-without-bond-hearing-pending-removal-proceedings [hereinafter “ACLU Immigration Detention Practice Advisory”].

53 The provision further specifies that it applies “without regard to whether the alien is released on parole, supervised release, or probation, and without regard to whether the alien may be arrested or imprisoned again for the same offense.” INA § 236(c). Despite the provision's language, DHS may release an individual detained under § 236(c), but does so extremely rarely. Practitioners have reported rare instances of ERO releasing an individual detained under this provision in extremely serious or urgent medical situations.

54 This provision also includes conduct-based, in addition to conviction-based, grounds of inadmissibility, such as those whom the government has a reason to believe have participated in controlled substance trafficking. See, e.g., INA § 212(a)(2)(C). It appears that DHS's practice is typically to rely on convictions, rather than conduct, in classifying individuals as subject to mandatory detention. In situations where there may be allegations of conduct-based inadmissibility under INA § 212(a)(2) in the absence

- Those inadmissible under INA § 212(a)(3)(B) [relating to those alleged to have engaged in terrorist activities]
- Those deportable for “having committed any offense” covered in INA § 237(a)(2)(A)(ii) [convicted of two or more crimes involving moral turpitude not arising out of a single scheme], (A)(iii) [convicted of an aggravated felony], (B) [convicted of a controlled substance offense other than a single offense of possession for own use of thirty grams or less of marijuana; or drug abuser or addict], (C) [convicted of a firearms offense], or (D) [convicted of miscellaneous offenses including espionage, sabotage, treason, sedition, threats against the president, expedition against a friendly nation, violating the Military Selective Service Act or Trading with the Enemy Act, travel control provisions, or importation of an alien for an immoral purpose]
- Those deportable under INA § 237(a)(2)(A)(i) “on the basis of an offense for which the alien has been sentence [sic] to a term of imprisonment of at least 1 year” [convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude which has a maximum sentence of at least a year, committed within five years after the date of admission], and
- Those deportable under INA § 237(a)(4)(B) [relating to terrorist activities].

If an individual is detained under section 236(c), the following strategies can be used to seek release:

- Joseph hearing before the IJ arguing that detention was wrongly categorized, and
- Habeas relief in federal court in cases of prolonged detention.

Joseph Hearings. In general, the IJ does not have jurisdiction to set a bond for an individual detained under section 236(c). However, the IJ does have jurisdiction to consider whether the individual has been properly classified as falling under section 236(c).⁵⁵ This is done through what is called a Joseph hearing, named after the BIA case that set forth the standard for these proceedings. A practitioner who believes that an individual’s detention has been improperly categorized as falling under section 236(c) (as opposed to section 236(a)) can file a motion with the immigration court seeking a Joseph hearing. The legal standard governing Joseph hearings is whether the government is substantially unlikely to prevail in establishing the charge that triggers mandatory detention. As is apparent from the complexity of these provisions, determining whether an individual properly falls within INA § 236(c) requires careful attention to the facts and the law—both criminal and immigration. A thorough discussion of this subject is beyond the scope of this guide. Practitioners are cautioned not to accept without scrutiny DHS’s determination that a client is subject to section 236(c); DHS sometimes makes mistakes in its legal analysis. Even if an offense appears to fall within one of the provisions above, the practitioner should of a conviction, DHS may also argue for high or no bond for such individuals and allege dangerousness. See infra section IV.A.5 (discussing mitigation of harmful evidence or facts).

⁵⁵ See 8 CFR § 1003.19(h)(2)(ii); Matter of Joseph, 22 I&N Dec. 799 (BIA 1999). For unpublished BIA cases reviewing whether a respondent was subject to mandatory detention, see, for example, A-C-D-, AXXX XXX 646 (BIA Dec. 11, 2015) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/293858313/A-C-D-AXXX-XXX-646-BIA-Dec-11-2015 (concluding that the respondent was not subject to mandatory detention because the conviction for operating a motor vehicle during a period of license suspension was not a CIMT); William Josue Rosales-Lazo, A095 021 153 (BIA Apr. 21, 2011) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/157462309/William-Josue-Rosales-Lazo-A095-021-153-BIA-April-21-2011 (remanding for further analysis of whether the respondent was subject to mandatory detention); Francisco Onate-Vazquez, A079 362 130 (BIA Apr. 14, 2011) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/157447990/Francisco-Onate-Vazquez-A079-362-130-BIA-April-14-2011 (concluding that the respondent was not subject to mandatory detention because convictions were not CIMTs).

reach out to experts to determine if there are arguments to make that the client is not subject to section 236(c).

There are several ways to establish that the client does not in fact fall under the mandatory detention provision and thus is entitled to seek a bond. To determine whether a client is subject to section 236(c), it is necessary to analyze: (1) whether he or she is subject to the grounds of inadmissibility or of deportability⁵⁶; (2) whether he or she has committed or been convicted of the criminal offense(s) alleged by DHS that serves as the basis for the mandatory detention⁵⁷; and (3) whether the given criminal offense in fact falls within the relevant immigration ground of inadmissibility or deportability. This latter task will likely involve applying the categorical or modified categorical approach, which is a multi-step inquiry used to determine whether a given offense falls within an immigration criminal ground of removal.⁵⁸ There are many excellent resources on this subject.⁵⁹ Practitioners are also encouraged to seek mentoring from a knowledgeable local practitioner and reach out to “criminal immigration” experts with specific questions.⁶⁰

Aside from challenging the alleged criminal ground of deportability or inadmissibility, practitioners should explore arguments that a client falls outside the scope of INA § 236(c) based on the statute’s “when released” language. To trigger mandatory detention under section 236(c), the individual must have been released from criminal custody after October 8, 1998,⁶¹ and the release must also have been related to an offense serving as a basis for the mandatory detention under INA § 236(c).⁶² It may also be possible to argue that the “when released” language means that ICE must take the individual into custody immediately upon release from criminal custody in order for the mandatory detention provision to apply. This argument has been rejected by the BIA,⁶³ but some federal courts have concluded that the “when released” language in the statute requires 56 Non-citizens “in and admitted to the United States” are subject to the grounds of deportability and thus the mandatory detention analysis for those individuals would encompass only those provisions of section 236(c) that cite the grounds of deportability. See INA § 237(a). Non-citizens who have not been admitted to the United States are subject to the grounds of inadmissibility, and thus the mandatory detention analysis for those individuals would encompass only those provisions of section 236(c) that cite the grounds of inadmissibility. See INA § 212.

57 Because “conviction” is a term of art in immigration law, it is important to analyze whether the criminal adjudication amounts to a “conviction” as that term is defined in the INA. See INA § 101(a)(48).

58 See, e.g., Mathis v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 2243 (2016); Descamps v. United States, 133 S. Ct. 2276 (2013); Moncrieffe v. Holder, 569 U.S. 184 (2013); Matter of Chairez, 26 I&N Dec. 819 (BIA 2016).

59 Practice materials on criminal immigration issues include the following: Katherine Brady, Immigrant Legal Resource Center, Practice Advisory: How to Use the Categorical Approach Now (Apr. 2017), www.ilrc.org/sites/default/files/resources/how_to_use_the_categorical_approach_now_april_2017.pdf; Manny Vargas, Dan Kesselbrenner & Andrew Wachtenheim, National Immigration Project of the National Lawyers Guild & Immigrant Defense Project, Practice Alert: In Mathis v. United States, Supreme Court Reaffirms and Bolsters Strict Application of the Categorical Approach (July 1, 2016), nationalimmigrationproject.org/PDFs/practitioners/practice_advisories/crim/2016_1July_mathis-alert.pdf; see also Maureen Sweeney, University of Maryland School of Law Immigration Clinic, videos available at www.law.umaryland.edu/programs/clinic/initiatives/immigration. When consulting practice advisories, practitioners should ensure that they incorporate the latest precedents. Practitioners should also conduct their own research and reach out to experts for tailored and up-to-date guidance.

60 The Immigrant Defense Project (IDP) offers consultations for individual cases. See IDP, Legal Advice, www.immdefense.org/what-we-do/legal-advice. In addition, some state public defender offices have “criminal immigration” experts who may assist with these inquiries.

61 See Matter of Adeniji, 22 I&N Dec. 1102 (BIA 1999); see also Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (IIRIRA), Division C of Pub. L. No. 104-208, § 303(b)(2), 110 Stat. 3009-586; Matter of West, 22 I&N Dec. 1405 (BIA 2000) (construing “released” in IIRIRA § 303(b)(2) to refer to release from physical custody).

62 Matter of Garcia Arreola, 25 I&N Dec. 267 (BIA 2010).

63 Matter of Rojas, 23 I&N Dec. 117 (BIA 2001) (holding that ICE may subject a non-citizen to mandatory detention any time after ICE to detain the individual promptly after release from criminal custody in order for the mandatory detention provision to be triggered.⁶⁴ On March 19, 2018, the Supreme Court granted certiorari in a case raising this issue, Nielsen v. Preap, No. 16-1363. Practitioners should research the controlling case law in their jurisdiction and monitor Supreme Court developments to determine the viability of these arguments.

Under BIA precedent, a respondent need not be charged in the Notice to Appear (NTA) with the ground of deportability or inadmissibility supporting the exercise of mandatory detention.⁶⁵ If the ground of deportability or inadmissibility alleged to subject the individual to mandatory detention under section 236(c) is the same ground alleged in the NTA that makes the person removable, and the practitioner believes there are arguments that this ground does not apply, the practitioner should file a motion to terminate the removal proceedings (done separately from the bond proceedings). In the context of an individual charged with a ground of deportability under INA § 237, it is the government's burden to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the alleged ground applies,⁶⁶ and proceedings must be terminated if the government cannot meet its burden. This is a more favorable framework to the respondent than the Joseph standard. If the practitioner prevails on the motion to terminate, but DHS reserves appeal, the practitioner can seek bond with the IJ.

Habeas Petitions in Federal Court. Even if there is no dispute that the respondent's detention falls under section 236(c), it may be possible to seek release by filing a habeas petition in federal district court challenging the legality of the detention where it is prolonged and indefinite. In a 2003 decision, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of section 236(c) in Demore v. Kim, 538 U.S. 510, but that case did not address the legality of prolonged mandatory detention. On February 27, 2018, the U.S. Supreme Court issued another decision addressing the legality of immigration detention, Jennings v. Rodriguez, 138 S. Ct. 830 (2018) (hereinafter "Rodriguez"). In Rodriguez, the Supreme Court reviewed the Ninth Circuit's interpretation of section 236(c). The Ninth Circuit had applied the canon of constitutional avoidance to conclude that non-citizens detained for six months were entitled to a bond hearing where the government had the burden to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the non-citizen required continued detention because he or she posed a danger or was a flight risk. The Supreme Court reversed the Ninth Circuit's judgment concluding that the constitutional avoidance interpretation was improper and that section 236(c) "mandates detention of any alien falling within its scope and that detention may end prior to the conclusion of removal proceedings 'only if' the alien is released for witness-protection purposes."⁶⁷ The Supreme Court remanded for consideration of the respondents' constitutional arguments. The Court also directed that the Ninth Circuit on remand reexamine whether the respondents could continue litigating their claims as a class.

release from criminal custody).

64 See, e.g., Preap v. Johnson, 831 F.3d 1193 (9th Cir. 2016), cert. granted, 86 U.S.L.W. 3459 (U.S. Mar. 19, 2018) (No. 16-1363) (holding that mandatory detention provision applies only to non-citizens detained promptly after their release from criminal custody, not to those detained long after release); Castaneda v. Souza, 810 F.3d 15 (1st Cir. 2015) (equally divided en banc court) (word "when" conveyed some degree of immediacy). But see, e.g., Lora v. Shanahan, 804 F.3d 601, 610-13 (2d Cir. 2015); Olmos v. Holder, 780 F.3d 1313 (10th Cir. 2015); Sylvain v. Att'y Gen., 714 F.3d 150 (3d Cir. 2013); Hosh v. Lucero, 680 F.3d 375 (4th Cir. 2012).

65 Matter of Kotliar, 24 I&N Dec. 124, 127 (BIA 2007) ("[W]here the basis for detention is not included in the charging document, the alien must be given notice of the circumstances or convictions that provide the basis for mandatory detention and an opportunity to challenge the detention before the Immigration Judge during the bond redetermination hearing.").

66 8 CFR § 1240.8(a).

67 138 S. Ct. at 847.

Prior to the Supreme Court's Rodriguez decision the Second Circuit had also held that non-citizens subject to section 236(c) detention have the right to a bond hearing within six months of detention, in Lora v. Shanahan, 804 F.3d 601 (2d Cir. 2015), vacated, --- S. Ct. ---, 84 U.S.L.W. 3562 (2018). Other courts of appeal, while not creating a blanket rule as in the Ninth and Second Circuits, had construed section 236(c) as authorizing detention without a bond hearing for only a limited period of time.⁶⁸ The Supreme Court's ruling in Rodriguez abrogates those decisions which rested on constitutional avoidance grounds. However, practitioners can still pursue habeas relief challenging the legality of prolonged detention under section 236(c) on purely constitutional grounds. Moreover, because the decisions by the courts of appeals were based primarily on due process concerns, they provide persuasive authority for challenges to prolonged mandatory detention.

In addition to arguments about the unconstitutionality of prolonged mandatory detention, practitioners could consider other challenges to the legality of detention under section 236(c). For example, practitioners could consider the argument that due process requires that section 236(c) not be applied to those who raise a substantial challenge to removal or a substantial claim to relief from removal.⁶⁹ A discussion of habeas is beyond the scope of this guide;⁷⁰ practitioners, however, should consider habeas relief where appropriate and should partner with practitioners who have federal court experience in filing for habeas relief. This might include exploring pro bono law firm and law school clinic partnerships.

Note on Respondents with Serious Mental Disorders or Conditions. An April 22, 2013 Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR) memo announced a number of procedural protections for respondents with serious mental disorders or conditions.⁷¹ The memo states that EOIR will begin implementation of a number 68 See, e.g., Reid v. Donelan, 819 F.3d 486 (1st Cir. 2016) (concluding that section 236(c) contains an implicit reasonableness limitation); Sopo v. Att'y Gen., 825 F.3d 1199 (11th Cir. 2016) (holding that section 236(c) has an implicit limitation against unreasonably prolonged detention without an individualized bond hearing); Ly v. Hansen, 351 F.3d 263 (6th Cir. 2003). Unlike the other circuits, the Third Circuit has held that prolonged mandatory detention under section 236(c) violates the Due Process Clause. See Chavez-Alvarez v. Warden, York County Prison, 783 F.3d 469 (3d Cir. 2015); Diop v. ICE/Homeland Security, 656 F.3d 221 (3d Cir. 2011). That precedent remains good law after Rodriguez.

69 See, e.g., Gayle v. Johnson, 81 F. Supp. 3d 371, 397–98 (D.N.J. 2015), vacated and remanded sub nom. Gayle v. Warden Monmouth Cty. Corr. Inst., 838 F.3d 297 (3d Cir. 2016) (upholding Joseph framework but requiring ICE to “establish to the satisfaction of an IJ at the Joseph hearing that there is probable cause to place an alien in mandatory detention”); Casas v. Devane, No. 15-CV-8112, 2015 WL 7293598, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 19, 2015) (where habeas petitioner had good-faith basis for challenging removal, court concluded that due process required an individualized bond hearing); Papazoglou v. Napolitano, No. 1:12-CV-00892, 2012 WL 1570778, at *5–6 (N.D. Ill. May 3, 2012) (where lawful permanent resident had been granted relief from removal by the IJ, this was a “legitimate defense to his removability” and due process required a bond hearing).

70 For further discussion of challenges to mandatory detention including arguments that the Joseph standard raises serious constitutional concerns, see ACLU Immigration Detention Practice Advisory, supra note 52; ACLU, Practice Advisory: Prolonged Detention Challenges After Jennings v. Rodriguez (Mar. 21, 2018), <https://www.aclu.org/other/practice-advisory-prolonged-detention-challenges-after-jennings-v-rodriguez>. For other resources on habeas in the context of immigration detention, see, for example, Immigrant Defense Project, Detention Litigation, www.immigrantdefenseproject.org/detention-litigation (providing consulting, drafting, and technical support for detention-related litigation); American Immigration Council, Introduction to Habeas Corpus (June 2008), www.americanimmigrationcouncil.org/practice_advisory/introduction-habeas-corpus.

71 Memorandum from Brian O’Leary, Chief Immigration Judge, EOIR, Nationwide Policy to Provide Enhanced Procedural Protections to Unrepresented Detained Aliens with Serious Mental Disorders or Conditions (Apr. 22, 2013), nwirp.org/Documents/ImpactLitigation/EOIRDirective04-22-2013.pdf; see also Press Release, EOIR, Department of Justice and the Department of Homeland Security Announce Safeguards for Unrepresented Immigration Detainees with Serious Mental Disorders or Conditions (Apr. 22, 2013), www.justice.gov/eoir/pr/departement-justice-and-department-homeland-security-announce-safeguards-unrepresented (“Additionally, detainees who were identified as having a serious mental disorder or condition that may render them mentally incompetent to represent themselves and who have been held in immigration detention for at least of measures, which it expects to be “fully operational by the end of 2013.” Among other measures, the memo directs that “unrepresented detained aliens who were initially identified as having a serious mental disorder or condition that may render them incompetent to represent themselves and who have been held in detention by DHS for six months or longer will be afforded a bond hearing.” Practitioners who represent individuals with competency issues could consider arguing that this memo applies and requires a bond hearing after six months in custody.

3. Detention Under INA § 235(b) of “Arriving Aliens” and Other Individuals in the Credible Fear Process

The immigration statutes and regulations provide for the detention of “arriving aliens,” and the regulations state that IJs do not have authority to re-determine the custody of arriving aliens.⁷² An arriving alien is defined as “an applicant for admission coming or attempting to come into the United States at a port-of-entry, or an alien seeking transit through the United States at a port-of-entry, or an alien interdicted in international or United States waters and brought into the United States by any means”⁷³ Arriving aliens include those seeking admission at a port of entry and can include asylum seekers and returning lawful permanent residents who are considered to be seeking admission.⁷⁴

Practitioners should assess whether a client has been properly classified as an arriving alien. Removable individuals who are apprehended within the United States, not at a port of entry and not subject to a final order of removal, should be detained under INA § 236, and the IJ should have jurisdiction to hold a bond hearing accordingly. Practitioners can determine where the client was apprehended by speaking with the client or trying to obtain a copy of Form I-213 from ICE ERO or ICE Office of Chief Counsel (OCC). If a client has been erroneously classified as an arriving alien, practitioners should gather proof and could attempt to persuade DHS to correct the NTA in addition to challenging the arriving alien classification in the removal proceeding. Practitioners could also attempt to challenge the arriving alien classification in a bond proceeding and thus argue that the client is eligible for bond. However, the IJ or DHS may take the position that the regulations do not give the IJ authority to determine whether a respondent is improperly included within the regulatory list found at 8 CFR § 1003.19(h)(2)(i)(B) describing those not eligible for an IJ bond redetermination as arriving aliens. Practitioners could argue that the BIA in Matter of Oseiwusu, 22 I&N Dec. 19 (BIA 1998), reached the merits of evaluating whether a respondent was an arriving alien before determining whether the IJ had authority six months will also be afforded a bond hearing.”). These changes were announced during the pendency of class action litigation in the Ninth Circuit on behalf of immigration detainees with mental disabilities, which resulted in a judgment providing protections to certain detainees in Arizona, California, and Washington. Franco-Gonzalez v. Holder, No. 10-02211, 2013 WL 3674492 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 23, 2013); see ACLU, Franco-Gonzalez v. Holder, www.aclu.org/cases/franco-gonzalez-v-holder (updated Apr. 24, 2013).

⁷² INA §§ 235(b)(1)(B)(ii); 235(b)(1)(B)(iii)(IV); 235(b)(2)(A) (detention of other applicants for admission who are not “clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted”); 8 CFR § 1003.19(h)(2)(i)(B) (listing “arriving aliens” among the categories of individuals for whom IJs are barred from reviewing custody).

⁷³ 8 CFR §§ 1.2, 1001.1(q).

⁷⁴ Lawful permanent residents are determined to be seeking admission in certain circumstances specified at INA § 101(a)(13)(C), including those who have committed an offense identified in INA § 212(a)(2), such as a crime involving moral turpitude, and have not received a section 212(h) waiver or cancellation of removal. Lawful permanent residents who make brief, casual, and innocent departures and whose conviction pre-dates IIRIRA are not subject to inadmissibility grounds and are not considered arriving aliens. Vartelas v. Holder, 566 U.S. 257 (2012).

to consider a bond request.⁷⁵

If an individual is an arriving alien, practitioners can employ several strategies:

- Parole request with ICE, and
- Habeas relief in federal court challenging prolonged detention or legality of parole procedures used.

Bond eligibility for asylum seekers in expedited removal proceedings. The immigration statutes generally allow for expedited removal of arriving aliens and certain other non-citizens who have recently entered the United States unlawfully⁷⁶ who are inadmissible based on certain grounds⁷⁷ (other than those who have a verified claim to U.S. citizenship, lawful permanent resident, refugee, or asylee status),⁷⁸ unless the non-citizen asserts an intention to apply for asylum or a fear of persecution.⁷⁹ If an individual in expedited removal proceedings claims fear of persecution, he or she must be referred to an asylum officer for a “credible fear” interview.⁸⁰ Asylum seekers in expedited removal proceedings who are found to have a credible fear must be referred to section 240 proceedings to present their asylum claim before an IJ.⁸¹

In Jennings v. Rodriguez, the U.S. Supreme Court interpreted INA § 235(b)(1)(B)(ii) to mandate detention of arriving alien asylum seekers who claim fear, are referred for a credible fear interview, and are determined to have a credible fear.⁸² The Court construed INA § 235(b)(1)(B)(ii) as requiring the detention of such asylum seekers pending the resolution of the section 240 proceedings, with the option of discretionary release on parole.⁸³

75 See also Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Ch. 9.3(b) (“[A]n Immigration Judge has jurisdiction to rule on whether he or she has jurisdiction to conduct a bond hearing.”); BIA Practice Manual, infra note X, Ch. 7.2(b)(iii) (“The Board has jurisdiction to rule on whether an Immigration Judge has jurisdiction to make a bond determination.”).

76 As of the date of this guide’s issuance, expedited removal procedures may be applied to arriving aliens as well as those who are apprehended within 100 miles of the Canadian or Mexican border and within 14 days of arrival. However, President Trump announced in an executive order his intention to expand the scope of expedited removal, possibly to the statutory maximum of any non-citizen who has not been “admitted or paroled into the United States, and who has not affirmatively shown, to the satisfaction of an immigration officer, that the alien has been physically present in the United States continuously for the 2-year period immediately prior to the date of the determination of inadmissibility under this subparagraph.” INA § 235(b)(1)(A)(iii) (II); see Border Security and Immigration Enforcement Improvements, Exec. Order No. 13767, 82 Fed. Reg. 8793 (Jan. 25, 2017), www.whitehouse.gov/presidential-actions/executive-order-border-security-immigration-enforcement-improvements. The DHS Secretary stated in a memorandum that any change to the scope of expedited removal would be announced in the Federal Register. Memorandum from John Kelly, DHS Sec’y, Implementing the President’s Border Security and Immigration Enforcement Improvements Policies § G (Feb. 20, 2017), www.dhs.gov/publication/implementing-presidents-border-security-and-immigration-enforcement-improvement-policies [hereinafter “Kelly Border Memo”].

77 Specifically, those who are inadmissible for misrepresentation or lack of proper entry documents under INA § 212(a)(6)(C) or (a) (7). See INA § 235(b)(1)(A).

78 See INA 235(b)(1)(C); 8 CFR § 235.3(b)(5). If an individual with a claim to U.S. citizenship, lawful permanent resident, refugee, or asylee status is improperly placed in expedited removal proceedings, he or she should assert the claim and seek to prevent the issuance of an expedited removal order or have an order already issued canceled. If DHS instead places such an individual in § 240 proceedings, any available arguments for termination should be explored.

79 See INA § 235(b)(1)(A).

80 See INA § 235(b)(1)(A)(ii).

81 See 8 CFR § 208.30(f).

82 138 S. Ct. 830, 842 (2018).

83 See discussion of parole infra; Rodriguez, 138 S. Ct. at 837(citing parole authority found at INA § 212(d)(5)(A), 8 CFR § 235.3, and 8 CFR § 212.5(b)).

Individuals who enter without inspection, are placed into expedited removal proceedings, and are determined to have a credible fear are also referred to section 240 proceedings. However, in contrast to arriving alien asylum seekers, they are eligible to seek a bond re-determination before the IJ under the BIA precedent Matter of X-K-

⁸⁴

If an asylum seeker in expedited removal proceedings is found not to have a credible fear, the government's view is that mandatory detention is authorized under INA § 235(b)(1)(B)(iii)(IV).⁸⁵ This section provides for detention until after an IJ reviews the negative credible fear finding and, if affirmed, until removal.

Parole Requests. Although arriving aliens are not able to seek bond before the IJ, they can seek release by filing a parole request with ICE, in an exercise of that agency's discretion.⁸⁶ The immigration statute and regulations direct that ICE can parole individuals on a case by case basis for urgent humanitarian reasons or significant public benefit.⁸⁷ A December 2009 ICE policy titled "Parole of Arriving Aliens Found to Have a Credible Fear of Persecution or Torture" describes the process by which an individual can be released on parole following a positive credible fear interview.⁸⁸ Thus, regardless of whether the asylum seeker is eligible for a bond hearing, he or she should be considered for parole under the ICE parole directive. With the change in administrations from President Obama to President Trump in January of 2017, however, it appears that the implementation of these parole provisions is changing.⁸⁹ In 2017, advocates filed a lawsuit challenging the procedures employed by ICE

⁸⁴ 23 I&N Dec. 731 (BIA 2005); see 8 CFR §§ 236.1(d); 1003.19(h)(2); see supra section II.B.1 for discussion of § 236(a) detention authority.

⁸⁵ Some advocates have argued that detention of individuals found not to have a credible fear is governed by INA § 241 because they have a final order of removal. Those detained under § 241 could have claims for release due to prolonged detention under the rule announced in Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678 (2001). See infra section II.B.4. No court has adopted this view to the knowledge of the authors.

⁸⁶ See 8 CFR § 235.3(c) (parole for arriving aliens placed in removal proceedings); 8 CFR § 235.3(b)(2)(iii) (parole during expedited removal process). There are multiple statutory forms of parole, including parole under INA § 212(d)(5) and conditional parole under INA § 236(a)(2)(B). The type of parole discussed here is governed by INA § 212(d)(5). It is important to identify the relevant type of parole because it can affect eligibility for other immigration remedies. For example, a person paroled under INA § 212(d)(5) is considered paroled into the United States for purposes of adjustment under INA § 245(a), while a person granted conditional parole under INA § 236(a)(2)(B) is not. See Matter of Castillo-Padilla, 25 I&N Dec. 257 (BIA 2010).

⁸⁷ INA § 212(d)(5); 8 CFR § 212.5(b) (requiring that the parole applicant have one of the following factors: (1) have a serious medical condition such that continued detention would be inappropriate; (2) be pregnant; (3) be a juvenile meeting certain requirements; (4) be a witness in proceedings before a judicial, administrative, or legislative body in the United States; (5) be an individual whose continued detention is not in the "public interest").

⁸⁸ See ICE Directive No. 11002.1, Parole of Arriving Aliens Found to Have a Credible Fear of Persecution or Torture § 6.2 (Dec. 8, 2009), www.ice.gov/doclib/dro/pdf/11002.1-hd-parole_of_arriving_alien_found_credible_fear.pdf [hereinafter "ICE Parole Directive"] (directing that parole generally be granted after an individual establishes a credible fear, provided he or she establishes his or her identity and does not pose a danger or flight risk).

⁸⁹ The Trump administration has stated its intentions to use parole "sparingly," although it has not yet rescinded the previous policies as of the date of this guide's issuance. See Kelly Border Memo, supra note 76, § K. While the 2009 policy apparently remains in effect, in practice immigrant rights groups have reported markedly fewer parole grants since the Trump administration came into office. See, e.g., Human Rights First, Judge and Jailer: Asylum Seekers Denied Parole in Wake of Trump Executive Order, at 1 (Sept. 2017), www.humanrightsfirst.org/sites/default/files/hrf-judge-and-jailer-final-report.pdf (noting that since the January 2017 executive order pro bono attorneys "rarely, if ever" saw an arriving asylum seeker released on parole); Kelsey Jukam, Asylum Seekers Sue ICE over Prolonged Detention, COURTHOUSE NEWS, Sept. 28, 2017, www.courthousenews.com/asylum-seekers-sue-ice-prolonged-detention/ (describing lawsuit filed on behalf of asylum seekers by Texas RioGrande Legal Aid challenging denial of parole to asylum seekers).

to deny parole to asylum seekers detained at a New York detention facility.⁹⁰ On November 17, 2017, the district court issued a preliminary injunction requiring ICE to follow the parole directive for putative class members—“arriving asylum-seekers who have passed a credible fear interview and who are or will be detained at the Buffalo Federal Detention Facility in Batavia, New York, and who have not been granted parole.”⁹¹

Parole requests for arriving alien asylum seekers can be made to ERO in the same manner in which other requests for release are made and using similar factors discussed above in Part 1 of this section.⁹²

Habeas Petitions. It may also be possible to challenge the legality of prolonged detention of arriving aliens through a habeas petition filed in federal district court. In Jennings v. Rodriguez, the Supreme Court reviewed the Ninth Circuit’s interpretation of section 235(b).⁹³ The Ninth Circuit had applied the canon of constitutional avoidance to conclude that non-citizens detained for six months were entitled to a bond hearing and applied circuit precedent to hold that the government had the burden to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the non-citizen required continued detention because he or she posed a danger or was a flight risk. The Supreme Court reversed the Ninth Circuit’s judgment concluding that the constitutional avoidance interpretation was improper and that sections 235(b)(1)(B)(ii) and (b)(2)(A) “mandate detention of applicants for admission until certain proceedings have concluded.”⁹⁴ The Supreme Court remanded for consideration of the respondents’ constitutional arguments. Practitioners should review the case law governing their particular jurisdiction to assess the viability of habeas relief in this context.⁹⁵ Given the holding in Rodriguez, prolonged detention arguments should be crafted on purely constitutional grounds rather than under a theory of constitutional avoidance. Practitioners could also explore arguments that the government failed to make an individualized parole determination, failed to follow its own parole directive, or otherwise acted unlawfully in its procedures for 90 New York Civil Liberties Union, Lawsuit Challenges Unlawful Detention of Asylum Seekers at Buffalo Immigration Jail (Sept. 26, 2017), www.nyclu.org/en/press-releases/lawsuit-challenges-unlawful-detention-asylum-seekers-buffalo-immigration-jail (noting that after President Trump’s inauguration, parole rates at the facility fell from about 50 percent to about 10 percent).

91 Abdi v. Duke, 280 F. Supp. 3d 373 (W.D.N.Y. 2017) (ordering the government to comply with the parole directive and ordering individualized bond hearings for arriving asylum seekers after six months in detention).

92 For more information on the process for seeking parole, see American Immigration Council, The Use of Parole Under Immigration Law (Jan. 24, 2018), www.americanimmigrationcouncil.org/research/use-parole-under-immigration-law.

93 138 S. Ct. 830 (2018).

94 138 S. Ct. at 842.

95 Before the Supreme Court’s Rodriguez decision, some district courts had held that prolonged detention without a bond hearing under INA § 235(b) violates the Due Process Clause or that the statute should be construed to contain a reasonableness limitation in order to avoid serious constitutional concerns. See, e.g., Ahad v. Lowe, 235 F. Supp. 3d 676 (M.D. Pa. 2017), appeal docketed, No. 17-1492 (3d Cir. Mar. 9, 2017) (concluding that 20-month detention of arriving alien asylum seeker was presumptively unreasonable and he was entitled to individualized IJ bond hearing); Maldonado v. Macias, 150 F. Supp. 3d 788 (W.D. Tex. 2015) (concluding that 26-month detention of returning LPR was unreasonable); Bautista v. Sabol, 862 F. Supp. 2d 375, 381-82 (M.D. Pa. 2012) (ordering bond hearing for returning LPR detained nearly 26 months and noting that “[w]hile courts have declined to establish concrete rules for appropriate detention periods, there exists a point—somewhere around the seven-month mark—where pre-removal detention becomes universally questionable”). Practitioners could use such decisions as persuasive authority supporting a constitutional argument against prolonged detention, even though any argument based on a theory of constitutional avoidance is not viable post Rodriguez.

denying parole.⁹⁶ A discussion of habeas relief is beyond the scope of this guide.⁹⁷

4. Detention Under INA § 241 for Individuals with Administratively Final Orders of Removal

Section 241 of the INA governs the detention and release of individuals who have been ordered removed. This detention scheme applies to those with administratively final removal orders,⁹⁸ including those granted withholding of removal and relief under the Convention Against Torture.⁹⁹

If an individual in detention has an order of removal, release strategies will depend on the procedural posture of the case but include:

- For persons subject to a judicial stay of removal based on a pending petition for review or in withholding-only proceedings, arguing (if precedent allows) that he or she is detained under INA § 236 and is entitled to a bond hearing
- For individuals detained under INA § 241(a)(6), seeking release under the post-order custody review regulatory process, and
- Seeking habeas relief in federal court if detention becomes prolonged.

Detention Classification for Individuals with Pending Petition for Review. An important initial consideration is whether or not an individual's detention is properly categorized as falling under INA § 241. If an individual has an administratively final removal order, but that order is stayed pending judicial review of the order in a U.S. court of appeals, he or she may have an argument that the detention is governed by INA § 236. While DHS may take the position that such an individual is detained under INA § 241, some U.S. courts of appeal have held that such individuals are detained under INA § 236.¹⁰⁰

⁹⁶ See, e.g., Marczak v. Greene, 971 F.2d 510, 515 (10th Cir. 1992) (interpreting prior version of parole regulations and noting that “a district director who decides parole applications on the basis of broad, non-individualized policies engages in . . . extra-procedural rule-making” and “in each case a district director must determine whether a particular person is likely to flee, and whether that person’s continued detention would be in the public interest”); Abdi v. Duke, 280 F. Supp. 3d 373 (W.D.N.Y. 2017) (concluding that ICE is required to follow its own parole directive under the Accardi doctrine).

⁹⁷ See resources discussed in note 68 supra.

⁹⁸ The regulations describe various circumstances under which an order of removal becomes final. 8 CFR § 1241.1. Typically, an order becomes final if the respondent is ordered removed in absentia, if the respondent fails to file an appeal of the IJ’s decision with the BIA, or if the BIA dismisses the respondent’s appeal.

⁹⁹ 8 CFR § 241.4(b)(3).

¹⁰⁰ See, e.g., Leslie v. Att’y Gen., 678 F.3d 265, 271 (3d Cir. 2012) (concluding that section 236, not section 241, governed detention where there was a judicial stay of removal pending further judicial review, and ordering an individualized bond hearing as the non-citizen’s detention had become “unreasonably long”); Casas-Castrillon v. DHS, 535 F.3d 942, 948 (9th Cir. 2008) (while DHS argued that a non-citizen with a pending petition for review and judicial stay was subject to mandatory detention under section 241, the Ninth Circuit concluded that section 236(a) “governs the prolonged detention of aliens awaiting judicial review of their removal orders”); Wang v. Ashcroft, 320 F.3d 130, 147 (2d Cir. 2003) (“[W]here a court issues a stay pending its review of an administrative removal order, the alien continues to be detained under § 236 until the court renders its decision.”); Bejjani v. INS, 271 F.3d 670, 689 (6th Cir. 2001), abrogated on other grounds by Fernandez-Vargas v. Gonzales, 548 U.S. 30 (2006) (concluding that INA § 241 does not authorize detention while a judicial stay of removal is pending). But see Akinwale v. Ashcroft, 287 F.3d 1050 (11th Cir. 2002) (per curiam) (assuming, without analysis, that detention pending a judicial stay is governed by INA § 241). For an article about post-removal order detention and review procedures in the Ninth Circuit, see Erik J. Drootman, The Expanded

Detention Classification for Individuals in Withholding-Only Proceedings. Similar arguments may be available to individuals in withholding-only removal proceedings. Withholding-only proceedings are afforded to individuals who have a final administrative order of removal but have been found by an asylum officer or IJ to have a reasonable fear of persecution.¹⁰¹ In withholding-only proceedings, individuals can pursue withholding of removal under the INA and relief under the Convention Against Torture.¹⁰² DHS takes the position that these individuals are detained under INA § 241, but the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit and multiple federal district courts have concluded that INA § 236 and not INA § 241 governs in this situation.¹⁰³ However, the Ninth Circuit, as well as some federal district courts, have concluded that section 241 governs detention during withholding-only proceedings.¹⁰⁴

Detention Authority for Individuals with Final Removal Orders Who Are Detained During the “Removal Period.” For those individuals who are correctly classified as detained under INA § 241, the statute provides for mandatory detention during the 90-day “removal period.”¹⁰⁵ The detention authority during the removal period is found at INA § 241(a)(2). The removal period begins on the latest of the following events:

- The date the removal order becomes “administratively final”¹⁰⁶
- If an individual’s removal is stayed by a court pending judicial review, the date of the court’s “final order,” or
- If the individual is detained other than “under an immigration process,” the date the individual is released from detention.¹⁰⁷

Once the removal period begins, DHS has 90 days to execute the removal order. The 90-day removal period can be extended, with the individual remaining in detention, if he or she “fails or refuses to make timely application in good faith for travel or other documents necessary to the alien’s departure or conspires or acts to prevent the alien’s removal subject to an order of removal.”¹⁰⁸

Bond Docket for Immigration Judges in the Ninth Circuit: Conducting Bond Hearings After Final Administrative Orders of Removal, 6 EOIR IMMIGR. LAW ADVISOR 1 (Jan. 2012), www.justice.gov/sites/default/files/eoir/legacy/2012/02/06/vol6no1.pdf.

101 See 8 CFR § 208.31.

102 EOIR, Fact Sheet: Asylum and Withholding of Removal Relief; Convention Against Torture Protections, at 5 (Jan. 15, 2009), www.justice.gov/sites/default/files/eoir/legacy/2009/01/23/AsylumWithholdingCATProtections.pdf (“Withholding-Only Hearing -- to determine whether an individual who has been ordered removed is eligible for withholding of removal under Section 241(b)(3) of the Immigration and Nationality Act or under the Convention Against Torture.”).

103 Guerra v. Shanahan, 831 F.3d 59 (2d Cir. 2016); see, e.g., Mendoza-Ordonez v. Lowe, 273 F. Supp. 3d 528, (M.D. Pa. 2017); Guerrero v. Aviles, No. 14-4367, 2014 WL 5502931 (D.N.J. Oct. 30, 2014) (unpublished); Uttecht v. Napolitano, No. 8:12CV347, 2012 WL 5386618 (D. Neb. Nov. 1, 2012) (unpublished).

104 Padilla-Ramirez v. Bible, 882 F.3d 826 (9th Cir. amended Feb. 15, 2018); see, e.g., Santos v. Sabol, No. 3:14-cv-0635, 2014 WL 2532491 (M.D. Pa. June 5, 2014). The Ninth Circuit decision is being challenged in a petition for rehearing which was pending as of the date of this guide’s issuance. Under Ninth Circuit precedent, individuals detained under section 241(a)(6) are entitled to a bond hearing after six months of detention. See Diouf v. Napolitano, 634 F.3d 1081 (9th Cir. 2011).

105 INA § 241(a)(2); see also 8 CFR § 241.3(a).

106 The regulations describe various circumstances under which an order of removal becomes final. 8 CFR § 1241.1.

107 INA § 241(a)(1)(B); 8 CFR § 241.4(g)(1)(i).

108 INA § 241(a)(1)(C); 8 CFR § 241.4(g)(1)(ii).

Strategies for Release of Individuals with Final Removal Orders Who Are Detained Beyond the “Removal Period.” If the individual is not removed within the removal period, then the statute and regulations list circumstances and conditions under which he or she may be released subject to DHS supervision.¹⁰⁹ At this point, detention authority shifts to INA § 241(a)(6). This section authorizes detention beyond the removal period of individuals who:

- Are inadmissible under INA § 212
- Are removable under INA § 237(a)(1)(C) (violators of nonimmigrant status or conditions of entry), (a)(2) (criminal grounds of deportability), or (a)(4) (security-related grounds), or
- Have been determined to be a “risk to the community or unlikely to comply with the order of removal.”¹¹⁰

The regulations describe who may be detained beyond the removal period, as well as the process for release after the removal period has ended.¹¹¹ An individual falling within INA § 241(a)(6) may be released after the removal period’s expiration if he or she “demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Attorney General or her designee that his or her release will not pose a danger to the community or to the safety of other persons or to property or a significant risk of flight pending such alien’s removal from the United States.”¹¹² In order to release an individual under these provisions, DHS “must conclude” that: (1) travel documents are not available or the individual’s immediate removal is not “practicable or not in the public interest”; (2) the individual is nonviolent and “likely to remain nonviolent if released”; (3) the individual is “not likely to pose a threat to the community following release”; and (4) the individual is not likely to violate release conditions or “pose a significant flight risk if released.”¹¹³ DHS is to weigh various factors in making a decision about continued detention, including the individual’s disciplinary history while in custody, “criminal conduct and criminal convictions,” mental health records, evidence of rehabilitation, positive factors such as ties to the United States, prior immigration history, history of failure to appear for proceedings, and any other “probative” information about whether the individual is likely to adjust to community life, commit violent or criminal acts, pose a danger to self, others, or property, or violate release conditions.¹¹⁴

The regulations describe the process by which custody determinations and periodic reviews are to be conducted.¹¹⁵ They also describe review procedures for individuals detained beyond the removal period who have “provided good reason to believe there is no significant likelihood of removal to the country to which he or she was ordered removed, or to a third country, in the reasonably foreseeable future.”¹¹⁶ If DHS concludes that there is no significant likelihood of the individual’s removal in the reasonably foreseeable future, then the individual should be promptly released on conditions, unless there are “special circumstances justifying continued

¹⁰⁹ See INA § 241(a)(3); 8 CFR § 241.4.

¹¹⁰ INA § 241(a)(6).

¹¹¹ 8 CFR §§ 241.4, 241.5, 241.13, 241.14.

¹¹² 8 CFR § 241.4(d)(1).

¹¹³ 8 CFR § 241.4(e).

¹¹⁴ 8 CFR § 241.4(f). Some advocates have reported ICE failure to follow the procedures for post-order custody reviews.

Practitioners who encounter instances in which ICE fails to follow the regulations may wish to reach out to Stephen Kang at the ACLU Immigrants’ Rights Project, skang@aclu.org.

¹¹⁵ 8 CFR § 241.4.

¹¹⁶ 8 CFR § 241.13(a).

detention.”¹¹⁷

If an individual is released after the end of the removal period, the regulations direct that he or she should be released on an order of supervision and subject to various conditions as determined appropriate by DHS.¹¹⁸ DHS can revoke release in various circumstances, including if the individual violates the conditions of release, when the “purposes of release have been served,” when it is “appropriate to enforce a removal order” against the individual, or if DHS deems release no longer appropriate.¹¹⁹

Finally, due process prohibits the indefinite detention of individuals detained under INA § 241(a)(6). In Zadvydas v. Davis, the Supreme Court held that there was an implicit reasonableness limitation on detention under § 241(a)(6) of those admitted to the United States and subsequently ordered removed, and that the presumptive reasonableness limit for post-removal period detention is six months.¹²⁰ In Clark v. Martinez, the Supreme Court extended the holding of Zadvydas to persons deemed inadmissible.¹²¹ The Ninth Circuit has construed section 241(a)(6) to require a bond hearing if an individual has been detained for six months.¹²² In other jurisdictions, individuals wishing to challenge the prolonged nature of their detention can bring a habeas action in federal district court.¹²³

5. Other Restrictions on Freedom – Alternatives to Detention and Orders of Supervision

Even where an individual is not physically detained initially, or is later released from immigration detention including after paying a bond, ICE may condition release on what are frequently called “alternatives to detention” (ATD).¹²⁴ These are restrictions on the person’s freedom ranging from an ankle shackle containing a global positioning system (GPS) monitoring device and regular reporting requirements or case management to telephone check-ins.¹²⁵ According to a 2009 ICE fact sheet, ATD “provides an appropriate level of supervision during removal proceedings to ensure compliance with a removal order for aliens whose detention is not required by statute, who present a low risk of flight, and who pose no danger to the community.”¹²⁶ One common ATD program is the Intensive Supervision Appearance Program (ISAP), which began in 2004.¹²⁷

117 8 CFR § 241.13(g)(1).

118 See 8 CFR §§ 241.5(a), 241.4(j).

119 8 CFR § 241.4(l). The regulations provide procedures for “informal” review of the revocation and periodic review of the subsequent detention.

120 533 U.S. 678 (2001).

121 543 U.S. 371 (2005).

122 Diouf v. Napolitano, 634 F.3d 1081 (9th Cir. 2011).

123 See resources listed in note 70. For a resource on the regulatory release process and habeas challenges for those detained under INA § 241(a)(6), see American Bar Association Commission on Immigration, A Legal Guide for ICE Detainees: Seeking Release from Indefinite Detention After Receiving a Final Order of Deportation (revised 2017), www.americanbar.org/content/dam/aba/publications/commission_on_immigration/legalguide_indefinitedetention.authcheckdam.pdf.

124 GAO Report to Congressional Committees, Alternatives to Detention: Improved Data Collection and Analyses Needed to Better Assess Program Effectiveness, GAO-15-26, at 9 (Nov. 2014), www.gao.gov/assets/670/666911.pdf (noting that “ICE may require participation in the ATD program as a condition of the alien’s release during immigration proceedings, or upon receipt of the alien’s final order of removal or grant of voluntary departure”) [hereinafter “2014 GAO ATD Report”].

125 Id. at 10-11.

126 ICE, Fact Sheet: Alternatives to Detention for ICE Detainees (Oct. 23, 2009), AILA Doc. No. 09110666, www.aila.org/infonet.

127 Id.

According to a 2015 DHS Office of Inspector General (OIG) report, there are two types of supervision options within ISAP: “full-service” and “technology-only.”¹²⁸ A contractor provides electronic monitoring services for both programs.¹²⁹ The full-service program requires the individual to have periodic in-person contact with the contractor, including office visits and unscheduled home visits. The individual may be required to wear a GPS-enabled ankle shackle, submit to “case management services,” and/or report telephonically.¹³⁰ Generally ERO officers decide what the “appropriate level of supervision and type of technology” is for individuals in the ATD program, and can move them from full-service to technology-only and vice versa “at their discretion.”¹³¹

ERO officers decide whether to place an individual in the ATD program. According to a 2014 GAO report, “[w]hen reviewing an alien’s case for possible placement in ATD, officers are to consider the alien’s criminal history, compliance history, community and family ties, and humanitarian concerns.”¹³² ERO officers also decide at what point and in what circumstances an individual may be taken off of the ATD program. Reasons for “termination” from the ATD program include:

- The individual is removed from the United States or voluntarily departs
- The individual is arrested by ICE for removal
- The individual receives relief from removal
- The individual is arrested by another law enforcement agency
- The individual “abscond[s]” or otherwise violates the ATD program conditions
- The individual’s removal case is administratively closed
- The individual moves to a jurisdiction where ATD is not offered, and
- The “ICE officers determine the alien is no longer required to participate.”¹³³

An individual may ask the IJ to ameliorate the conditions imposed on his or her release, including requirements imposed by ICE through an ATD program. This must be done within seven days of release from physical confinement, through a motion to ameliorate the conditions of release filed in immigration court.¹³⁴ If more than seven days have elapsed, the IJ does not have jurisdiction over the request, and instead the individual could seek such relief via a request to ERO.¹³⁵ Given ERO’s discretion over who should be placed in the program and 128 DHS OIG, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement’s Alternatives to Detention (Revised), OIG-15-22, at 4 (Feb. 4, 2015), www.oig.dhs.gov/assets/Mgmt/2015/OIG_15-22_Feb15.pdf.

129 Id.

130 See 2014 GAO ATD Report, supra note 124, at 10.

131 Id. at 10-11 (“Under the current program, an alien’s status in immigration proceedings generally dictates the required number of office visits and unscheduled home visits by the contractor for aliens in the Full-service component.”).

132 Id. at 9.

133 Id. at 11 & 23 n.51.

134 See 8 CFR § 236.1(d)(1) (“If the alien has been released from custody, an application for amelioration of the terms of release must be filed within 7 days of release.”); Matter of Aguilar-Aquino, 24 I&N Dec. 747 (BIA 2009) (the regulation’s reference to “custody” means “actual physical restraint or confinement within a given space”); Matter of Garcia-Garcia, 25 I&N Dec. 93 (BIA 2009).

135 8 CFR § 236.1(d)(2); Matter of Chew, 18 I&N Dec. 262, 263 (BIA 1982) (“We find nothing in the regulations that would preclude an alien from reapplying to the District Director for modification of the conditions of his custody status after the

when an individual can be terminated from the program, a well-documented request presenting equities and hardships would be wise. Note also that ISAP contractors have historically refused to speak with an individual's legal representative. Instead, ISAP asks that the legal representative discuss any concerns with the ERO officer overseeing the individual's case.

Orders of Supervision. Orders of supervision are a form of supervised release from ICE custody, typically imposed on individuals who are subject to an order of removal.¹³⁶ An individual released on an order of supervision is required to comply with certain conditions, such as periodic reporting requirements, continued efforts to obtain a travel document, reporting for a physical or mental examination, obtaining advance approval for travel, and providing written change of address information.¹³⁷

An individual may seek to reduce or ease the conditions of an order of supervision by requesting relief with ERO. For example, he or she might request to have no check-ins or less frequent check-ins. ERO may agree to less frequent check-ins, for example once per year, particularly in cases where the individual can show a long history of compliance. If the individual is subject to an order of removal, another way to end an order of supervision is to seek reopening of the underlying removal order – assuming there is a legal basis to do so – by filing a motion to reopen.¹³⁸

C. CHART: IMMIGRATION DETENTION AND REMEDIES TO SEEK RELEASE

Figure 1 provides a visual description of the various strategies for release from immigration detention discussed in section II.B. In several places, this guide has referenced arguments that could be made in federal district court habeas actions. As this chart illustrates, these arguments could also be raised before the IJ and on appeal to the BIA, even though the agency may conclude that it lacks authority to consider constitutional arguments or that its own precedent precludes the argument. It may still be wise to raise arguments before the agency for strategic reasons, including to comply with prudential exhaustion doctrine for those anticipating potential habeas litigation in federal court. A discussion of habeas and exhaustion doctrine is beyond the scope of this guide. Practitioners should research precedents governing their jurisdiction to determine the viability of potential arguments.

immigration judge has been divested of jurisdiction by the lapse of seven days following the alien's release from custody. . . ."); see also Matter of Daryoush, 18 I&N Dec. 352, 353 (BIA 1982) (concluding that "in rendering a determination on an application for amelioration of the conditions of bond pursuant to 8 CFR 242.2(b), the District Director must state the reasons for his decision").

136 8 CFR §§ 241.5(a); 241.4.

137 8 CFR § 241.5(a).

138 For guidance on filing motions to reopen, see American Immigration Council, Basics of Motions to Reopen EOIR-Issued Removal Orders (Feb. 2018), www.americanimmigrationcouncil.org/practice_advisory/basics-motions-reopen-eoir-issued-removal-orders; Florence Immigrant and Refugee Rights Project, Motions to Reopen Guide (May 2013), firrp.org/media/Motions-to-Reopen-Guide-2013.pdf.

FIGURE 1. Immigration Detention and Remedies to Seek Release

Detention Classification	DHS Remedy?	Immigration Court Remedy?	Federal Court Remedy?
Arriving alien › Strategies discussed in section II.B.3	File parole request with ICE	If the individual was erroneously classified as an arriving alien, seek IJ review of the determination	Seek habeas relief if prolonged detention or challenging the legality of the process followed in making parole determinations
In removal proceedings – section 236(a) › Strategies discussed in section II.B.1	Negotiate with ICE ERO for release on recognizance or low bond	Bond hearing	Seek habeas relief if prolonged detention, asking for a new bond hearing where the government bears the burden of proof by clear and convincing evidence (for those denied bond initially based on danger) or where IJ must consider the respondent's ability to pay (if respondent could not pay initial bond set)
In removal proceedings – section 236(c) › Strategies discussed in section II.B.2	Seek discretionary release with ERO (highly unlikely to be granted unless serious and urgent medical issues are present)	Request Joseph hearing if there is a basis to challenge the section 236(c) classification, and/or if detention becomes prolonged	Seek habeas relief if prolonged detention, based on argument that "when released" means promptly after release from criminal custody (if case law permits), or based on other theories such as that those with a substantial challenge to removal are not subject to section 236(c)
Final order of removal – section 241 › Strategies discussed in section II.B.4	Seek release with ICE through regulatory process	In Ninth Circuit, Diouf provides for bond hearing after six months of detention. In other circuits, could still attempt to seek a bond hearing if detention becomes prolonged	Seek habeas relief if prolonged detention
Pending petition for review with a stay of removal › Strategies discussed in section II.B.4	Seek release with ICE through regulatory process	Seek bond hearing arguing that detention falls under section 236(a), if jurisdiction's case law permits, and/or if detention becomes prolonged	Seek habeas relief arguing that the individual's detention is governed by section 236(a), or based on prolonged detention
In removal proceedings – withholding only › Strategies discussed in section II.B.4	Seek release with ICE through regulatory process	Seek bond hearing arguing that detention falls under section 236(a), if jurisdiction's case law permits, and/or if detention becomes prolonged (in Ninth Circuit, Diouf provides for bond hearing after six months of detention)	Seek habeas relief arguing that the individual's detention is governed by section 236(a), or based on prolonged detention
Alternatives to detention › Strategies discussed in section II.B.5	Request that ICE remove or ease conditions	File motion seeking amelioration of conditions within seven days of release from custody	Confer with experienced federal court litigators to determine whether there are viable federal court remedies

III. OVERVIEW OF LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CUSTODY REDETERMINATION IN REMOVAL PROCEEDINGS

This section provides an overview of the legal authority, case law, and procedures governing custody redetermination hearings—also known as bond hearings¹³⁹—in immigration court. This section does not discuss in detail who is eligible to seek bond in immigration court, as that was discussed in section II above. In general, individuals who are detained under INA § 236(a) are eligible to seek bond before the immigration court.

A. WHICH AGENCIES CAN SET A BOND AND HOW CAN A RESPONDENT REQUEST BOND?

As discussed above, ICE has authority in the first instance to set bond for an individual detained under INA § 236(a).¹⁴⁰ Of course, just because ICE has the option to set a bond does not mean that an initial bond will be set.¹⁴¹ ICE may decline to set any bond, even though the individual is detained under INA § 236(a) and is thus statutorily eligible for bond. Whether or not ICE sets an initial bond, the IJ then has the authority to review the bond amount set by DHS or make a “custody redetermination” for those detained under § 236(a).¹⁴² Note, however, that the respondent must request a bond redetermination hearing from the immigration court; the IJ does not have authority to re-determine bond sua sponte.¹⁴³ Additionally, a respondent only receives one custody redetermination hearing with the IJ, unless he or she can show that circumstances have changed materially since the prior hearing.¹⁴⁴ An individual can request a custody redetermination orally at a master calendar hearing, in writing, or by telephone at the discretion of the IJ.¹⁴⁵

¹³⁹ This guide uses both the term “bond redetermination” and “custody redetermination.” References to bond hearings and bond motions in this guide are meant to include requests for conditional parole by the IJ.

¹⁴⁰ See 8 CFR § 236.1(c)(8), (d).

¹⁴¹ Advocates can argue that the statute and implementing regulations require ICE to make an individualized custody determination based on flight risk and dangerousness, even though that determination may result in the decision not to set any bond amount. INA § 236(a); 8 CFR § 236.1(c)(8).

¹⁴² 8 CFR §§ 1003.19(a), 236.1(d).

¹⁴³ Matter of P-C-M-, 20 I&N Dec. 432 (BIA 1991).

¹⁴⁴ See 8 CFR § 1003.19(e).

¹⁴⁵ See 8 CFR § 1003.19(b); Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Ch. 9.3(c); see also Matter of Valles, 21 I&N Dec.

B. IN WHICH IMMIGRATION COURT SHOULD A RESPONDENT REQUEST A BOND HEARING?

The regulations specify before which immigration court the respondent should file a custody redetermination request, in order of preference: (1) the immigration court with jurisdiction over the place of detention; (2) the immigration court with administrative control over the case; or (3) “the Office of the Chief Immigration Judge for designation of an appropriate Immigration Court.”¹⁴⁶ The regulations governing the location of the custody redetermination request are not jurisdictional.¹⁴⁷ ICE determines the place of detention and can move a detained individual at any time.¹⁴⁸ ICE also determines the initial venue for removal proceedings based on where it files the NTA.¹⁴⁹ If ICE transfers an individual while removal proceedings are pending, ICE must notify the immigration court at which point ICE OCC may seek to change venue by filing a change of venue motion.¹⁵⁰ If ICE transfers a respondent to a distant and inconvenient location and seeks to change venue, the respondent’s representative may file an opposition to DHS’s venue motion and note the following: the court’s ability to call a respondent via video-conference, that the transfer impedes on the respondent’s right to representation, and the difficulty of traveling to the new detention center, particularly if the practitioner represents the respondent on a pro bono basis.¹⁵¹ Regardless of whether the court changes venue, a custody redetermination hearing could be held in the new location.¹⁵² If DHS transfers an individual to a different jurisdiction after he or she has requested a custody redetermination hearing, practitioners can argue that the original immigration court may adjudicate the custody redetermination motion, given that the regulations focus on the place of detention at the time of filing the custody redetermination motion.¹⁵³

769, 771 (BIA 1997) (“In bond proceedings, an alien remains free to request a bond redetermination at any time without a formal motion, without a fee, and without regard to filing deadlines, so long as the underlying deportation proceedings are not administratively final. In other words, no bond decision is final as long as the alien remains subject to a bond.”).

146 8 CFR § 1003.19(c).

147 Matter of Cerda Reyes, 26 I&N Dec. 528, 530-31 (BIA 2015) (noting that the rules are “mandatory, but not jurisdictional” and that “[a]lthough the regulations suggest that a bond hearing will usually be held in the location where the alien is detained, policies related to the scheduling of bond hearings, including determining the location of the hearing, are properly within the province of the [Office of the Chief Immigration Judge]”).

148 See supra section II.A.3 (discussing ICE transfer policies).

149 See 8 CFR § 1239.1(a).

150 See 8 CFR § 1003.19(g) (discussing requirement that ICE notify IJ of transfer); Memorandum from MaryBeth Keller, Chief Immigration Judge, EOIR, OPPM 18-01, Change of Venue, at 5 (Jan. 17, 2018), www.justice.gov/eoir/page/file/1026726/download [hereinafter “2018 Change of Venue OPPM”].

151 All filings with the immigration court, including an opposition to a change of venue motion, must comply with the Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2. The Immigration Court Practice Manual provides for a 10-day deadline for responding to motions for non-detained individuals, Ch. 3.1(b)(i)(A), but response deadlines in detained cases are “as specified by the Immigration Court,” Ch. 3.1(b)(i)(B). For this reason, it is wise to file an opposition as soon as possible. If the DHS motion to change venue is granted, practitioners may also seek to appear by telephone or video-conference, and if representing the respondent pro bono may wish to cite to the EOIR operating policies and procedures memorandum (OPPM) on facilitating pro bono services, which authorizes this practice. Memorandum from David L. Neal, Chief Immigration Judge, EOIR, OPPM 08-01, Guidelines for Facilitating Pro Bono Legal Services, at 4 (Mar. 10, 2008), www.justice.gov/eoir/oppm-log (“[J]udges should be flexible when a pro bono representative seeks to appear telephonically or through video conferencing. . .”).

152 See 2018 Change of Venue OPPM, supra note 150, at 5 (“If DHS produces the alien at a court in another location, absent a valid order changing venue or a new charging document, venue and administrative control does not reside at that location, except for bond redetermination requests, if any.” (emphasis added)).

153 See Palacios v. Sessions, No. 18-cv-26 (W.D.N.C. filed Jan. 17, 2018); American Immigration Council, Challenging Immigration Judges’ Refusal to Conduct Bond Hearings, www.americanimmigrationcouncil.org/litigation/challenging-immigration-judges-

C. WHEN IS THE EARLIEST THAT A DETAINED INDIVIDUAL CAN REQUEST A BOND HEARING?

An individual in immigration detention need not wait until DHS files the NTA or until an initial hearing is scheduled to request a bond hearing with the immigration court.¹⁵⁴ However, the immigration court will not have jurisdiction over a bond request unless and until the individual is in immigration custody.¹⁵⁵ The Immigration Court Practice Manual notes that once a respondent requests a bond hearing, the court “schedules the hearing for the earliest possible date and notifies the alien and the Department of Homeland Security.”¹⁵⁶

D. BOND HEARING PROCEDURES – REPRESENTATION

Respondents may be represented at bond hearings.¹⁵⁷ A practitioner may enter his or her appearance in a bond hearing by filing Form EOIR-28, Notice of Entry of Appearance as Attorney or Representative Before the Immigration Court, with the immigration court and serving a copy on ICE OCC. A legal representative may enter an appearance solely for the bond proceeding by checking the box on Form EOIR-28 indicating that the appearance is for “custody and bond proceedings only.”¹⁵⁸ Representatives may appear in person at the bond proceeding or may request leave to appear telephonically.¹⁵⁹ Sometimes the bond hearing is conducted immediately before or after a master calendar hearing, which can cause confusion for the respondent.¹⁶⁰ Practitioners should be cognizant that strategies in the bond proceeding may affect and can be closely tied to strategies in the underlying removal case. Practitioners should be careful about concessions made in the bond proceeding and avoid a strategy that could be prejudicial in the underlying removal case. Practitioners should proceed with particular caution if they are not going to be representing the client in the underlying case but rather only in the bond proceeding. Practitioners should also carefully explain to the client if representation will be limited to the bond proceeding and the effect of this limited representation on the removal proceedings.

E. BOND HEARING PROCEDURES – SEPARATE RECORD

Bond hearings are “separate and apart from” removal proceedings.¹⁶¹ The record created in a bond proceeding refusal-conduct-bond-hearings (describing lawsuit).

154 See 8 CFR § 1003.14(a).

155 Matter of Sanchez, 20 I&N Dec. 223 (BIA 1990); Matter of Leher, 15 I&N Dec. 159 (BIA 1975).

156 Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Ch. 9.3(d) (noting also that “[i]n limited circumstances, an Immigration Judge may rule on a bond redetermination request without holding a hearing”).

157 See id. Ch. 9.3(e)(ii) (“In a bond hearing, the alien may be represented at no expense to the government.”).

158 8 CFR § 1003.17(a). The final rule establishing this option is available at www.justice.gov/eoir/file/772051/download. Form EOIR-28 is available at www.justice.gov/sites/default/files/pages/attachments/2015/07/24/eoir28.pdf.

159 See Memorandum from David L. Neal, Chief Immigration Judge, EOIR, OPPM No. 08-04, Guidelines for Telephonic Appearances by Attorneys and Representatives at Master Calendar and Bond Redetermination Hearings (July 30, 2008), www.justice.gov/sites/default/files/eoir/legacy/2008/08/01/08-04.pdf (directing that IJs adjudicate motions for telephonic appearance on a case by case basis, considering a number of enumerated factors).

160 Cf. Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Ch. 9.3(d).

161 8 CFR § 1003.19(d).

is kept separate from the Record of Proceeding pertaining to the underlying removal proceedings.¹⁶² Bond hearings are not always recorded, and individuals do not generally have a right to a transcript of the bond hearing.¹⁶³ Because bond proceedings are separate, a respondent wishing to have evidence from the bond proceeding included in the removal proceedings record should separately file that evidence in the removal proceeding. Likewise, a respondent wishing to have evidence in the removal case considered in the bond case should introduce that evidence into the bond record.¹⁶⁴ Even though the proceedings are separate, courts have ruled differently as to whether evidence presented or testimony given during a bond hearing may be considered in the removal proceeding.¹⁶⁵ DHS may seek to re-submit evidence presented in the bond proceedings during the removal proceedings, such as evidence related to criminal history that falls outside of the requirements governing what is part of the record of conviction.¹⁶⁶ In addition, as a practical matter, the same IJ usually handles bond and removal in a respondent's case, so if the IJ forms a strong impression of the respondent in the bond hearing, it may carry over into the removal case.

F. BOND HEARING PROCEDURES – EVIDENCE

An IJ can consider “any information that is available to the Immigration Judge or that is presented to him or her by the alien or the Service” in making a bond determination.¹⁶⁷ Any evidence that is “probative and specific” can be considered during the bond hearing.¹⁶⁸ This can include evidence of pending criminal charges or other 162 Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Ch. 9.3(e)(iv) (“The Immigration Judge creates a record, which is kept separate from the Records of Proceedings for other Immigration Court proceedings involving the alien.”).

163 Matter of Chirinos, 16 I&N Dec. 276, 277 (BIA 1977) (stating that “there is no right to a transcript of a bond redetermination hearing” nor any requirement of a “formal hearing” and that even a telephonic hearing may be permissible). The Ninth Circuit has held that in the context of bond hearings of individuals with pending petitions for review whose detention has been prolonged, due process requires that the immigration court make a contemporaneous record of the proceeding such as through an audio recording made available to the parties upon request. Singh v. Holder, 638 F.3d 1196, 1208–09 (9th Cir. 2011).

164 See Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Ch. 9.3(e)(v) (“Since the Record of Proceedings in a bond proceeding is kept separate and apart from other Records of Proceedings, documents already filed in removal proceedings must be resubmitted if the filing party wishes them to be considered in the bond proceeding.”); Matter of Adeniji, 22 I&N Dec. 1102 (BIA 1999) (“[W]e consider it inappropriate to look to portions of the record in the merits appeal that were not referenced in or made part of the bond record.”).

165 Compare Joseph v. Holder, 600 F.3d 1235, 1240–43 (9th Cir. 2010) (IJ erred in using her notes from respondent’s testimony during bond hearing to make an adverse credibility determination during the subsequent removal hearing), with Zivkovic v. Holder, 724 F.3d 894, 911 (7th Cir. 2013) (IJ can take into account relevant evidence that arises in bond proceedings for consideration in removal proceedings).

166 See Shepard v. United States, 544 U.S. 13 (2005) (describing what documents are part of the record of conviction). Practitioners should be vigilant any time DHS seeks to introduce evidence and should make timely and proper objections to preserve the record. See also Cevada Azizyan, A044 428 950 (BIA May 13, 2016) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/313685922/Cevada-Azizyan-A044-428-950-BIA-May-13-2016 (remanding after termination for further consideration of whether the respondent had been admitted, and directing that the IJ should consider whether the statements the respondent made during bond proceedings regarding his entry into the United States, which were submitted by DHS in the removal proceeding via a transcript, were inconsistent with testimony during the removal proceedings).

167 8 CFR § 1003.19(d). Citing this regulation, the Ninth Circuit concluded that it was proper for an unauthenticated RAP sheet to come into the bond record and that the authentication requirements found at 8 CFR § 287.6(a) do not apply in bond proceedings. Singh v. Holder, 638 F.3d 1196, 1209–10 (9th Cir. 2011).

168 Matter of Guerra, 24 I&N Dec. 37, 40–41 (BIA 2006). Practitioners should object if evidence offered by DHS is not probative or specific, such as in situations where it is unreliable, the source is not stated, or it contains inaccuracies. See infra section IV.A.5 (discussing strategies to combat a dangerousness finding when DHS introduces harmful allegations in the absence of a conviction).

criminal records beyond conviction documents, such as criminal complaints.¹⁶⁹ Unless otherwise stated by the IJ, the usual document filing deadlines do not apply in bond proceedings.¹⁷⁰ However, practitioners should be mindful that, at least in some jurisdictions, filing documents sufficiently in advance will make it more likely that the IJ adequately reviews them before the hearing.¹⁷¹ There is no filing fee for a bond motion.¹⁷²

G. BOND AMOUNTS

By statute, the minimum monetary bond that an IJ can set is $1,500.¹⁷³ There is no statutory maximum bond amount. The statute also provides that a non-citizen may be released on “conditional parole.”¹⁷⁴ While some IJs have historically concluded that they lack authority to grant this type of release, in a class action lawsuit DHS conceded that IJs do have this authority.¹⁷⁵ When an individual is detained under INA § 236(a), an IJ can do any of the following: set a bond where ICE has held the person without a bond, lower the bond set by ICE, or raise the bond set by ICE.¹⁷⁶ The Ninth Circuit has ruled that IJs must consider the respondent’s ability to pay in setting bond amounts; this is discussed in section III.H.4 below.

H. CASE LAW ON ADJUDICATION OF BOND REDETERMINATION REQUESTS

1. Burden of Proof

BIA case law directs that it is the respondent’s burden to prove eligibility for bond. The regulations state that in the context of bond decisions made by DHS, “the alien must demonstrate to the satisfaction of the officer that such release would not pose a danger to property or persons, and that the alien is likely to appear for any future proceeding.”¹⁷⁷ Over the last several decades, the BIA has repeatedly stated that it is the respondent’s burden to establish that he or she should be released.¹⁷⁸ However some U.S. courts of appeal have held that 169 Matter of Guerra, 24 I&N Dec. at 41 (finding appropriate IJ’s consideration of complaint containing “specific and detailed” allegations related to pending drug trafficking charges, where it was signed by a Drug Enforcement Agency agent, described the source of the allegation that the respondent was involved in selling drugs, and “set[] forth the events leading to the respondent’s arrest, including locations, alleged accomplices, and other details”).

170 Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Ch. 9.3(e)(v).

171 The practitioner may also argue that the timely advance filing gave the IJ and the ICE OCC attorney sufficient time to review the documents before the hearing.

172 Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Ch. 9.3(c)(2).

173 INA § 236(a)(2)(A).

174 INA § 236(a)(2)(B).

175 Rivera v. Holder, 307 F.R.D. 539 (W.D. Wash. 2015); see ACLU Immigrants’ Rights Project, ACLU of Washington & Northwest Immigrant Rights Project, Practice Advisory: Immigration Judges’ Authority to Grant Release on Conditional Parole Under INA § 236(a) as an Alternative to Release on a Monetary Bond (Sept. 2015), www.aclu.org/legal-document/rivera-v-holder-practice-advisory. Due to the district court’s ruling in the Rivera litigation, IJs in the state of Washington must consider conditional parole in making custody redeterminations. Even though this ruling is not binding outside Washington state, practitioners can argue based on the statutory language that all IJs have the authority to grant, and should consider, conditional parole.

176 See Matter of Spiliopoulos, 16 I&N Dec. 561, 562 (BIA 1978).

177 8 CFR § 236.1(c)(8).

178 See, e.g., Matter of Siniauskas, 27 I&N Dec. 207 (BIA 2018); Matter of Guerra, 24 I&N Dec. 37, 40–41 (BIA 2006); Matter of Adeniji, 22 I&N Dec. 1102 (BIA 1999); Matter of Drysdale, 20 I&N Dec. 815, 817 (BIA 1994).

where bond hearings become required due to the length of detention, due process places the burden of proof on the government to establish by clear and convincing evidence that continued detention is justified.¹⁷⁹ Despite BIA precedent on burden of proof, practitioners might wish to include arguments during bond proceedings that the burden of proof should be on the government. Practitioners could argue that due process requires that the government have the burden, and could point out that the statute does not address the burden of proof in IJ bond proceedings. Given BIA precedent to the contrary, these arguments are unlikely to be successful before either the IJ or the BIA, but there may be strategic reasons to include them (in addition to arguing that even if the respondent has the burden, he or she has met it in the individual case), particularly looking ahead to possible federal court habeas challenges.

2. Relevant Factors

In the 1976 case of Matter of Patel, the BIA stated that “[a]n alien generally is not and should not be detained or required to post bond except on a finding that he is a threat to the national security . . . or that he is a poor bail risk.”¹⁸⁰ Through subsequent decisions, the BIA has established that the respondent must show that “he or she does not present a danger to persons or property, is not a threat to the national security, and does not pose a risk of flight.”¹⁸¹ In Matter of Guerra, the BIA stated that “[a]n alien who presents a danger to persons or property should not be released during the pendency of removal proceedings.”¹⁸² In other words, the IJ should not set any bond if the respondent poses a danger to the community.¹⁸³ Only if the IJ concludes that the respondent does not pose a danger does the IJ reach the question of flight risk.¹⁸⁴ The BIA has affirmed in multiple decisions the principle that it is the respondent’s burden to prove lack of dangerousness. See for example the 1999 case, Matter of Adeniji,¹⁸⁵ the 2009 case, Matter of Urena,¹⁸⁶ and the 2018 case, Matter of Siniauskas.¹⁸⁷

In a 2016 case, Matter of Fatahi, the BIA ruled that the IJ can consider circumstantial evidence of dangerousness, can review the “totality of the facts and circumstances presented,” and that the dangerousness question is “broader than determining if the record contains proof of specific acts of past violence or direct evidence of an inclination toward violence.”¹⁸⁸ In that case, the respondent had no criminal convictions or charges, but the BIA upheld the IJ’s decision not to set a bond because he had made misrepresentations about his use of a fraudulent passport.¹⁸⁹ Practitioners may seek to distinguish the Fatahi case, as it appeared to implicate national security ¹⁷⁹ See, e.g., Lora v. Shanahan, 804 F.3d 601 (2d Cir. 2015); Singh v. Holder, 638 F.3d 1196 (9th Cir. 2011); see also Chavez-Alvarez v. Warden York County Prison, 783 F.3d 469 (3d Cir. 2015) (ordering a bond hearing in the context of prolonged § 236(c) detention where the government would be required to “produce individualized evidence” that the respondent’s continued detention was necessary); Diop v. ICE/Homeland Sec., 656 F.3d 221 (3d Cir. 2011) (holding that when a respondent’s detention under § 236(c) becomes unreasonably long, “the Government must justify its continued authority to detain him at a hearing at which it bears the burden of proof”).

¹⁸⁰ 15 I&N Dec. 666, 666 (BIA 1976).

¹⁸¹ Matter of Guerra, 24 I&N Dec. 37, 38 (BIA 2006).

¹⁸² Id.

¹⁸³ Matter of Urena, 25 I&N Dec. 140, 141 (BIA 2009) (“Dangerous aliens are properly detained without bond.”).

¹⁸⁴ Id., see flight risk discussion infra.

¹⁸⁵ 22 I&N Dec. 1102, 1113 (BIA 1999).

¹⁸⁶ 25 I&N Dec. 140, 141 (BIA 2009).

¹⁸⁷ 27 I&N Dec. 207, 208 (BIA 2018).

¹⁸⁸ 26 I&N Dec. 791, 795 (BIA 2016).

¹⁸⁹ Id.

concerns and alleged ties to a terrorist group.

Guerra lists a number of factors that the IJ can consider in making a bond determination, which include:

1. “whether the alien has a fixed address in the United States;
2. the alien’s length of residence in the United States;
3. the alien’s family ties in the United States, and whether they may entitle the alien to reside permanently in the United States in the future;
4. the alien’s employment history;
5. the alien’s record of appearance in court;
6. the alien’s criminal record, including the extensiveness of criminal activity, the recency of such activity, and the seriousness of the offenses;¹⁹⁰
7. the alien’s history of immigration violations;
8. any attempts by the alien to flee prosecution or otherwise escape from authorities; and
9. the alien’s manner of entry into the United States.”¹⁹¹

BIA case law affords the IJ “broad discretion” in considering what factors to consider and how to weigh these factors.¹⁹²

In the 2018 case Matter of Siniauskas, the BIA noted that “it is proper for the Immigration Judge to consider not only the nature of a criminal offense but also the specific circumstances surrounding the alien’s conduct.”¹⁹³ The respondent in that case had a recent DUI arrest and three DUI convictions from over a decade ago, and had presented evidence and argument to show rehabilitation and that he was not a danger to the community. The BIA noted that a number of the factors enumerated in Matter of Guerra, such as family and community ties, possibility of discretionary relief, fixed address, long residence in the United States, and employment history, are relevant to flight risk.¹⁹⁴ The BIA stated, however, that “family and community ties generally do not mitigate an alien’s dangerousness.”¹⁹⁵ The BIA ordered that the respondent be detained without any bond, finding that he had not met his burden to prove he was not a danger to the community because of his recent DUI arrest. Where detained respondents have DUI arrests or convictions, it will be important for practitioners to distinguish a client’s case from Matter of Siniauskas, arguing that the bond analysis requires an individualized determination. Some features of Mr. Siniauskas’s case that could be distinguished include:

190 BIA case law allows the IJ to consider evidence of pending charges or arrests where no charges or convictions have resulted. See, e.g., Siniauskas, 27 I&N Dec. at 208-09.

191 24 I&N Dec. at 40.

192 Id. at 40.

193 27 I&N Dec. 207, 208 (BIA 2018).

194 Id. at 209.

195 Id. at 210.

- There were multiple DUIs (three convictions and a fourth arrest)¹⁹⁶
- Three of the four incidents, including the recent one, involved accidents
- There was a recent DUI arrest, “undercut[ting] [the respondent’s] argument that he has established rehabilitation and does not pose a danger to the community”¹⁹⁷
- The respondent did not appear to dispute the veracity of the allegations underlying the pending charge, and
- The factors that the respondent presented as mitigation or to negate dangerousness existed before the recent arrest and had not prevented it.

In concluding that the evidence of family and community ties did not mitigate dangerousness, the BIA reasoned that the respondent “ha[d] not shown how his family circumstances would mitigate his history of drinking and driving, except to explain that the most recent incident occurred on the anniversary of his mother’s death.”¹⁹⁸

3. Flight Risk Determinations

Under prevailing BIA case law, the IJ should not consider flight risk unless he or she first determines that the respondent “would not pose a danger to property or persons.”¹⁹⁹ Unlike the dangerousness determination, an IJ can conclude that the respondent poses some level of flight risk and still set a bond to ensure appearance at future hearings.²⁰⁰ Since “[t]he purpose of the bond is to ensure the respondent’s presence at future proceedings,” the IJ may set an amount of bond that varies “according to his assessment of the amount needed to motivate the respondent to appear in light of the considerations deemed relevant to bond determinations.”²⁰¹ In Matter of Drysdale, for example, the BIA affirmed a $20,000 bond based on the fact that the respondent had “left his parental home and moved to another area, committed a serious drug trafficking crime soon after entering the United States, and was ineligible for any form of relief from deportation,” and had an administratively final order of removal.²⁰² Sometimes the issue of flight risk overlaps with dangerousness. For example, the IJ may consider a respondent’s criminal record as relevant to a flight risk determination (in addition to its more obvious relevance to dangerousness), to the extent that it may affect the respondent’s eligibility for immigration relief.²⁰³

¹⁹⁶ See id. (“This is not a case involving a single conviction for driving under the influence from 10 years ago.”).

¹⁹⁷ Id. at 209.

¹⁹⁸ Id. at 210.

¹⁹⁹ Urena, 25 I&N Dec. at 141–42; accord Siniauskas, 27 I&N Dec. at 210.

²⁰⁰ See Matter of Drysdale, 20 I&N Dec. 815, 818 (BIA 1994) (noting that “[u]nlike the standard for determining if there is a danger to the community, [the flight risk determination] allows for flexibility”); see, e.g., [Respondent Name Redacted] (BIA Aug. 7, 2014) (unpublished), AILA Doc. No. 14100846, www.aila.org/infonet (agreeing with IJ that respondent was a flight risk given lack of employment record, no property ownership, and employment of a smuggler to gain entry to the United States, but ordering release on $5,000 bond because “evidence of a fixed address where she will reside, significant family ties in this country, and her claim of relief from removal provide some incentive for her to appear for future immigration proceedings”).

²⁰¹ Drysdale, 20 I&N Dec. at 818. Note that the Drysdale case was decided in 1994, before current statutory provisions governing mandatory detention were enacted.

²⁰² Id.

²⁰³ In Matter of Andrade, the BIA overruled the IJ’s decision to release the respondent on his own recognizance and set a $10,000 bond, reasoning that the respondent’s criminal history “negatively affects the discretionary grant” of relief for which he was statutorily eligible, “thereby giving him less motivation to appear at his deportation hearing.” 19 I&N 488, 491 (BIA 1987).

4. Consideration of Respondent's Ability to Pay in Setting Bond Amount

On October 2, 2017, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit ruled in a class action case, Hernandez v. Sessions, that IJs in bond proceedings must consider a respondent's ability to pay as well as his or her amenability to release on alternatives to detention.²⁰⁴ The court's ruling was grounded in the Fifth Amendment due process right, which "prohibits our government from discriminating against the poor in providing access to fundamental rights, including the freedom from physical restraints on individual liberty."²⁰⁵ In the decision, Judge Stephen Reinhardt wrote, "While the temporary detention of non-citizens may sometimes be justified by concerns about public safety or flight risk, the government's discretion to incarcerate non-citizens is always constrained by the requirements of due process: no person may be imprisoned merely on account of his poverty."²⁰⁶ While this ruling is only binding in immigration courts located within the Ninth Circuit, practitioners throughout the country should consider arguing that as a matter of due process, IJs in bond proceedings must consider ability to pay and suitability for release on alternatives to detention, citing to the Hernandez decision as persuasive authority.²⁰⁷

5. The Government's Use of Deterrence as a Bond Factor

In a 2003 opinion, Matter of D-J-, the Attorney General ruled that the government could deny bond for the purpose of deterring mass migration, citing national security interests.²⁰⁸ In 2014, after a surge in the migration of women and children fleeing violence in Central America, the U.S. government began detaining large numbers of mothers and children in family detention centers. It argued that they should not be released on bond despite passing credible fear interviews and cited the deterrent effect as justification. The ACLU filed a class action lawsuit challenging the government's policy of denying bond to families based on a general deterrence rationale rather than considering individualized circumstances.²⁰⁹ In May of 2015, the government issued a policy stating that it would no longer consider general deterrence in making detention decisions for families; the lawsuit is now administratively closed so long as the government continues to abide by that policy.²¹⁰ Note, however, that the government could still invoke deterrence as a national security-based rationale in cases that do not involve 204 Hernandez v. Sessions, 872 F.3d 976 (9th Cir. 2017).

205 Id. at 981.

206 Id.

207 See ACLU, Practice Advisory: Bond Hearings and Ability-to-Pay Determinations in the Ninth Circuit Under Hernandez v. Sessions (Dec. 2017), www.aclu.org/other/practice-advisory-bond-hearing-and-ability-pay-determinations (includes tips on making these arguments in bond hearings and sample pro se motions). Individuals unable to pay the bond amount set could also consider whether habeas relief in federal district court might be appropriate, arguing that the bond amount must take into account the individual's ability to pay. See Adam Klasfeld, Haitian Asylum Seeker Freed in Landmark Bond Case, COURTHOUSE NEWS, June 14, 2017, www.courthousenews.com/haitian-asylum-seeker-freed-landmark-bond-case (reporting the case of an individual who successfully argued before the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York for a lower bond based on arguments that he was unable to pay the initial bond amount set).

208 Matter of D-J-, 23 I&N Dec. 572 (A.G. 2003) ("As demonstrated by the declarations of the concerned national security agencies submitted by INS, there is a substantial prospect that the release of such aliens into the United States would come to the attention of others in Haiti and encourage future surges in illegal migration by sea. Encouraging such unlawful mass migrations is inconsistent with sound immigration policy and important national security interests.").

209 See R.I.L.R. v. Johnson, No. 15-11 (D.D.C. filed Jan. 6, 2015). Litigation documents including the complaint and amended complaint are available on the ACLU's website at www.aclu.org/cases/rilr-v-johnson (updated July 1, 2015).

210 ACLU, RILR v. Johnson, www.aclu.org/cases/rilr-v-johnson (updated July 1, 2015).

6. BIA Cases on Bond²¹²

Having discussed the general legal framework for bond determinations, it is useful to examine how this framework is applied in practice. The subsequent pages of this guide provide brief summaries of BIA cases reviewing custody redeterminations, both published and unpublished. This is not an exhaustive list.²¹³ It is hoped that practitioners might be able to invoke favorable BIA decisions (and distinguish unfavorable BIA precedents) when they seek custody redeterminations before the IJ. Note that while unpublished BIA decisions are not precedential, they may still be used as a persuasive tool in making arguments to the IJ and in considering possible relevant factors.

Published BIA Cases Granting Bond or Lowering Bond Amount

- In the 1974 case Matter of San Martin,²¹⁴ the BIA ordered that a bond of $15,000 be set, after the IJ had denied bond. In that case, the respondent had previously been deported and re-entered illegally. He had a marijuana possession conviction, a pending cocaine possession charge, had previously failed to appear in criminal court, and lacked “close family ties” in the United States. The BIA noted that he had been awarded bail in the criminal proceedings.
- In the 1976 case Matter of Patel,²¹⁵ the BIA ordered the respondent’s release on his own recognizance, after the IJ had set a $500 bond. In that case, the respondent had overstayed a student visa and had been denied a visa petition because he lacked a labor certification. The BIA stated that “[t]hese factors bear little if any relevance to the issue of whether or not the respondent is likely to appear for his deportation proceeding.” The BIA noted the following positive factors: the respondent had no criminal history, lacked involvement in “subversive or immoral activities” or with narcotics, had been living with his wife and U.S. citizen child, had worked for the same employer for almost two years, had kept his address up-to-date with the Immigration Service, and had filed suit in federal court regarding the labor certification denial.
- In the 1978 case Matter of Spiliopoulos,²¹⁶ the BIA lowered the bond from $2,500 to $1,500. In that case, the respondent had entered on a tourist visa and begun working unlawfully shortly after his arrival, and he resided in the United States with his wife and child who lacked lawful status. The BIA concluded that the $2,500 bond set by the IJ was excessive, noting that the respondent had no criminal record or history of immigration violations, no history of nonappearance at court proceedings, and had a fixed residence.

Unpublished BIA Cases Granting Bond, Lowering Bond Amount, or Dismissing DHS Appeal

²¹¹ If the ICE OCC attorney invokes deterrence as a rationale in a bond case, practitioners can reach out to the ACLU’s Immigrants’ Rights Program, which has been monitoring this issue, by contacting Stephen Kang at skang@aclu.org.

²¹² The mechanics of filing an appeal of a bond decision to the BIA are discussed in section V infra.

²¹³ Some of the published decisions in this section predate the current law on mandatory detention.

²¹⁴ 15 I&N Dec. 167 (BIA 1974).

²¹⁵ 15 I&N Dec. 666 (BIA 1976).

²¹⁶ 16 I&N Dec. 561 (BIA 1978).

- In unpublished case J-S-A,²¹⁷ the BIA reversed the IJ's finding that no bond amount could mitigate flight risk and remanded for the IJ to set a bond. In that case, the respondent had resided in the United States for approximately 20 years, had significant family ties to the United States, had a fixed address, had worked for several years as an electrician, and had a DACA renewal application pending. The IJ had declined to set any bond due to flight risk based on the respondent's dismissed DUI charge and several traffic violations.
- In unpublished case N-Y-T-H,²¹⁸ the BIA reversed the IJ's dangerousness finding and remanded to the IJ to make a flight risk determination. In that case, the IJ had declined to set a bond based on a dangerousness finding, where the respondent had five citations for driving without a license. The BIA concluded that the driving citations, "without more, are insufficient to demonstrate that the respondent poses a danger to the community."
- In unpublished case J-W,²¹⁹ the BIA reversed the IJ's dangerousness finding and remanded to the IJ to set a reasonable bond. In that case, the IJ had declined to set a bond due to a dangerousness finding where the respondent had a 2016 disorderly conduct conviction and a pending prostitution charge. The BIA concluded that this criminal history was "insufficient to demonstrate that the respondent presents a danger to the community."
- In unpublished case J-D-L-L-J,²²⁰ the BIA reversed the IJ's dangerousness finding and remanded for the IJ to make a flight risk determination. In that case, the IJ had declined to set any bond based on dangerousness where the respondent had numerous convictions for driving without a license. The BIA "disagree[d] with the [IJ] that such record evidences dangerousness, particularly as there is no evidence that the convictions and charges involved any aggravating circumstances."
- In unpublished case M-R-G-C,²²¹ the BIA reduced the bond from $8,500 to $3,000. In that case, the respondent had been granted a bond hearing under the Franco-Gonzalez judgment governing certain respondents with mental disabilities detained in Arizona, California, and Washington. The BIA concluded that a lower bond, in conjunction with a release plan including IJ-ordered conditions on release such as weekly check-ins with DHS, was sufficient to ensure the respondent's appearance at future hearings.
- In unpublished case E-S,²²² the BIA reversed the IJ's dangerousness finding and remanded for the IJ to make a flight risk determination. In that case, the BIA concluded that the evidence was insufficient to establish that the respondent presented a danger to the community. The respondent had 3 arrests for 217 XXXX XXX 618 (BIA Nov. 21, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/367642397/J-S-A-XXXX-XXX-618-BIA-Nov-21-2017.

218 XXXX XXX 854 (BIA Oct. 19, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/365694613/N-Y-T-H-XXXX-XXX-854-BIA-Oct-19-2017.

219 XXXX-XXX-281 (BIA Oct. 13, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/365693152/J-W-XXXX-XXX-281-BIA-Oct-13-2017.

220 XXXX XXX 318 (BIA Sept. 28, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/362583499/J-D-L-L-J-XXXX-XXX-318-BIA-Sept-28-2017.

221 XXXX XXX 102 (Aug. 31, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/360077980/M-R-G-C-XXXX-XXX-102-BIA-Aug-31-2017.

222 XXXX XXX 170 (Aug. 17, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/360077436/E-S-XXXX-XXX-170-BIA-Aug-17-2017.

driving without a license, had been living in the United States for 14 years, and there was no indication that he had caused an accident. The BIA also disagreed with the IJ's reasoning that the respondent's "speculative" eligibility for relief and "any potential issues with his tax returns" precluded him from showing he did not pose a danger.

- In unpublished case K-S-,²²³ the BIA remanded for reconsideration where the IJ had declined to set a bond due to dangerousness. In that case, the IJ had concluded that the respondent presented a danger because he had not complied with DHS's request for his passport, although he had provided other identity documents to the court. The BIA concluded that there was "insufficient persuasive evidence" in the record to show that the respondent would present a danger if released, and remanded for further proceedings.
- In unpublished case E-D-J-F-T-,²²⁴ the BIA dismissed DHS's appeal of a $10,000 bond set by the IJ. In that case, the respondent had a 2016 DUI conviction, which had not resulted in any injury to persons or property, had a newborn U.S. citizen child, and the child's mother was without status but seeking asylum.²²⁵
- In unpublished case E-C-,²²⁶ the BIA dismissed DHS's appeal of a $7,500 bond, which the IJ had set on condition that the respondent participate in a residential alcohol treatment program. In that case, the respondent had two DUI convictions from 2016, as well as two older public intoxication convictions. The BIA declined to disturb the IJ's conclusion that the respondent had met his burden of showing he was not a danger to the community where he had provided evidence of his participation in alcohol rehabilitation programs while in detention, his enrollment in a residential treatment program if released, and his family support.²²⁷
- In unpublished case E-J-E-B,²²⁸ the BIA set a $10,000 bond after the IJ had ordered no bond based on flight risk. In that case, the IJ had noted that the respondent had recently arrived in the United States, that his family members in the United States had only visitor's visas, and that his relief was "speculative" despite passing a credible fear interview (CFI). The BIA concluded that a $10,000 bond was warranted given that the respondent had "strong family ties in the United States (regardless of their immigration status or length of time in this country)," had a place to live if released, and had passed the CFI.
- In unpublished case Helia de La Cruz-Palencia,²²⁹ the BIA reduced the bond from $10,000 to $3,500. In that case, the respondent had previously entered the United States without permission and had been 223 AXXX-XXX-141 (Aug. 17, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/360077482/K-S-AXXX-XXX-141-BIA-Aug-17-2017.

224 AXXX XXX 302 (BIA May 19, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/351903730/E-D-J-F-T-AXXX-XXX-302-BIA-May-19-2017.

225 This case precedes Matter of Siniauskas, 27 I&N Dec. 207 (BIA 2018), and reflects the BIA's traditional approach to recent DUI arrest(s). Practitioners should take care to not concede that a recent DUI is determinative evidence of dangerousness.

226 AXXX XXX 516 (BIA Apr. 20, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/349318995/E-C-AXXX-XXX-516-Bia-April-20-2017.

227 This case precedes Matter of Siniauskas, and reflects the BIA's traditional approach to recent DUI arrest(s). Practitioners should take care to not concede that a recent DUI is determinative evidence of dangerousness.

228 AXXX XXX 122 (BIA Nov. 13, 2015) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/290748981/E-J-E-B-AXXX-XXX-122-BIA-Nov-13-2015.

229 A074 374 352 (BIA May 13, 2011) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/155928968/Helia-de-La-Cruz-Palencia-A074-374-352-BIA-May-13-2011.

ordered removed in absentia. In lowering the bond, the BIA cited the fact that she was married to a lawful permanent resident, had three U.S. citizen children, had previously received work authorization, had filed tax returns in some years, and had submitted a character letter from her pastor.

- In unpublished case Marcelino Simbron-Sanchez,²³⁰ the BIA reduced the bond from $20,000 to $5,000. In that case, the respondent had resided in the United States for almost 20 years, had 2 U.S. citizen children, and was eligible for cancellation of removal.
- In unpublished case Salvador Jr. Villaruel,²³¹ the BIA reversed the IJ's denial of bond based on flight risk and remanded for the IJ to set an appropriate bond. In that case, the respondent had entered the United States more than 30 years earlier, as a 2 year old, was married to a U.S. citizen and had 2 U.S. citizen children, had been employed with the same company for more than 2 years, and had an approved visa petition based on his marriage. The IJ denied bond because he concluded that the respondent was not eligible to adjust status in the United States. The BIA noted the respondent's "significant and long-standing ties to the United States" and concluded that a bond should be set.
- In unpublished case Carlos Antonio Taracena-Herrera,²³² the BIA dismissed DHS's appeal of a $4,000 bond set by the IJ. In that case, the respondent had been deported decades previously and subsequently reentered illegally, and DHS argued that he was not eligible for adjustment of status. The BIA noted that the respondent had "no record of violent criminal history or other antisocial behavior," had resided in the United States for over 20 years, owned a home in the United States, was married to a U.S. citizen, had a history of paying income taxes, and had presented letters showing community ties and stable work history.
- In unpublished case Miguel Barron-Villeda,²³³ the BIA remanded for further proceedings where the IJ had declined to set a bond due to flight risk. The BIA corrected the IJ's factual determination that the respondent had no potential relief or family ties, noting that the respondent had a pending petition for U nonimmigrant status and had submitted support letters from family lawfully residing in the United States.
- In unpublished case Eddy Bismark Nunez-Garrido,²³⁴ the BIA dismissed DHS's appeal of a $50,000 bond set by the IJ. In that case, the IJ had determined that the respondent showed he was not dangerous despite an in absentia foreign murder conviction for which he received a 20-year sentence, absconded, and had a pending international arrest warrant. The BIA noted the "significant passage of time" since the offense, the respondent's "clean record" since, that the homicide appeared to have been a result of accidental or "at worst, reckless conduct," the respondent's "significant family and community ties" and his potential relief.

230 A201 029 423 (BIA Apr. 21, 2011) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/155927628/Marcelino-Simbron-Sanchez-A201-029-423-BIA-April-21-2011.

231 A092 722 540 (BIA Mar. 17, 2011) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/155924664/Salvador-Jr-Villareal-A092-722-540-BIA-March-17-2011.

232 A092 446 911 (BIA Feb. 28, 2011) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/155931594/Carlos-Antonio-Taracena-Herrera-A092-446-911-BIA-Feb-28-2011.

233 A093 342 975 (BIA Feb. 18, 2011) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/155923493/Miguel-Barron-Villeda-A093-342-975-BIA-Feb-18-2011.

234 A099 115 048 (BIA Feb. 3, 2011) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/155930372/Eddy-Bismark-Nunez-Garrido-A099-115-048-BIA-Feb-3-2011.

Published BIA Cases Upholding Denial of Bond, Denying Respondent's Request for Lower Bond, or Remanding for Potential Raising of Bond

- In the 1979 case Matter of Shaw,²³⁵ the BIA dismissed the respondent's appeal seeking to lower a $5,000 IJ bond. In that case, the respondent had pending firearms charges and "minimal" community ties. The BIA noted that the IJ had "placed an undue reliance on the pending criminal charges and the lack of a large criminal bond in setting the significant bond ordered in this case," reasoning that a low criminal bond did not justify a larger immigration bond. The BIA, however, affirmed the $5,000 bond, noting that the respondent had presented no evidence of how long he had resided in the United States, his employment history, where he resided, whom he lived with, how he entered the United States, or community ties.
- In the 1987 case Matter of Andrade,²³⁶ the BIA reversed the IJ's order that the respondent be released on his own recognizance and set a $10,000 bond. In that case, the BIA noted the respondent's "extensive and recent" criminal record including multiple convictions for burglary and receipt of stolen goods. The BIA reasoned that the IJ gave undue weight to the fact of the respondent's early release on parole. Despite the fact that the respondent had been a lawful permanent resident since age three, all of his family were U.S. citizens or lawful permanent residents, and that he was eligible for relief, the BIA concluded that a $10,000 bond was necessary to ensure his future appearance.
- In the 1999 case Matter of Adeniji,²³⁷ the BIA reversed the IJ's order that the respondent be released on his own recognizance and remanded for further development of the record about whether the respondent was a danger or flight risk. In that case, the respondent had convictions for bank fraud conspiracy and for making false statements to the Immigration Service and had been granted withholding of removal, which DHS had appealed. The BIA stated that the IJ had not provided sufficient reasoning regarding the respondent's lack of dangerousness, noting that the respondent's bank fraud conviction and "history of deceitful behavior" made it a difficult question.
- In the 2006 case Matter of Guerra,²³⁸ the BIA dismissed the respondent's appeal of the IJ's denial of bond. In that case, the IJ had concluded that the respondent posed a danger if released due to a pending drug trafficking-related charge involving more than five kilograms of cocaine. The BIA concluded that the IJ had appropriately considered the evidence of pending charges in the dangerousness analysis and upheld the no-bond decision.
- In the 2009 case Matter of Urena,²³⁹ the BIA remanded for further consideration after the IJ granted a $15,000 bond. The IJ had set a bond despite concluding that the respondent posed a "potential danger to the community based on his criminal history, which includes a conviction and several arrests for offenses with the potential for violent harm to persons." The BIA found remand necessary for clarification of whether the respondent had met his burden to show he did not pose a danger, noting that if the IJ determined that the respondent's release would pose a danger to the community, then no bond should be

235 17 I&N Dec. 177 (BIA 1979).

236 19 I&N Dec. 488 (BIA 1987).

237 22 I&N Dec. 1102 (BIA 1999).

238 24 I&N Dec. 37 (BIA 2006).

239 25 I&N Dec. 140 (BIA 2009).

set.

- In the 2016 case Matter of Fatahi,²⁴⁰ the BIA dismissed the respondent's appeal of the IJ's denial of bond. In that case, the respondent had no criminal history but the IJ concluded that he was a danger to the community and a flight risk based on the fact that he had acquired a false passport which the government alleged was part of a group of passports that had been stolen from the Syrian government by Islamic State operatives and had made misrepresentations to DHS about the passport. The respondent noted that there was "no evidence that he knew the passport was stolen by terrorists before he received it and that no direct link has been established between him and any terrorist organization." The BIA upheld the IJ's no bond decision, noting the national security concerns and concluding that "the circumstantial evidence and the respondent's misrepresentations raise significant safety and security concerns that justify his continued detention."
- In the 2018 case Matter of Siniauskas,²⁴¹ the BIA reversed the $25,000 bond set by the IJ and ordered the respondent detained without bond. In that case, the respondent had three DUI convictions from more than a decade ago and a pending charge from a recent DUI arrest. Three of the four incidents had involved accidents. The BIA noted the respondent's family and community ties, such as his marriage to a lawful permanent resident, the fact that he had an approved visa petition filed by his U.S. citizen daughter, his fixed address, long residence in the United States, employment history including owning a business, church support, and charitable activities. He had also provided evidence of treatment by a physician and participation in Alcoholics Anonymous meetings. Noting that "[d]runk driving is an extremely dangerous crime" and a "significant adverse consideration in bond proceedings," the BIA concluded that the respondent had not met his burden to show lack of dangerousness and that no bond should be set.

Unpublished BIA Cases Upholding Denial of Bond or Remanding for Potential Raising of Bond

- In unpublished case Igor Viktorovich Borbot,²⁴² the BIA dismissed the respondent's appeal of the IJ's denial of bond. In that case, there was evidence of pending criminal charges against the respondent in Russia related to fraud, which the respondent said were pretextual and in retaliation for his political opposition to the Russian government. However, the BIA concluded that the respondent had not "demonstrated that the Immigration Judge's dangerousness finding lacked a reasonable foundation in the record" and declined to set bond.
- In unpublished case Ricardo Jose Rodriguez,²⁴³ the BIA reversed the IJ's $15,000 bond and remanded for further reasoning. In that case, the BIA noted the respondent's recent arrest, pending criminal charges, and alleged admitted affiliation with a street gang and noted that the IJ had failed to reach any conclusion regarding dangerousness and provided insufficient reasoning concerning flight risk.

240 26 I&N Dec. 791 (BIA 2016).

241 27 I&N Dec. 207 (BIA 2018).

242 A206 553 756, 2016 WL 7655983, at *2 (BIA Sept. 1, 2016) (unpublished).

243 A200 886 952 (BIA Apr. 14, 2011) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/155925695/Ricardo-Jose-Rodriguez-A200-886-952-BIA-April-14-2011.

IV. NUTS AND BOLTS OF BOND PROCEEDINGS

This section provides practical tips for effective preparation for and representation of clients during a bond hearing.²⁴⁴ Part A of this section discusses preparation, including working with the detained client, gathering and developing evidence, and submitting documents to the immigration court. Part B provides practical tips for the bond hearing itself. Part C covers post bond hearing considerations.

A. BOND HEARING PREPARATION

Adequate preparation in advance of a bond hearing is critical. While it is possible to go forward with a bond hearing with minimal or no preparation and receive a favorable result, respondents must be advised that the IJ will only conduct one custody redetermination hearing, unless the individual can demonstrate that circumstances have changed materially since the prior hearing.²⁴⁵ Therefore, the first hearing may be the respondent's only opportunity to obtain a low bond amount.

It is the respondent's burden to prove that he or she is not dangerous and his or her release does not present a flight risk. Preparation and submission of documents may be key for meeting this burden, particularly for individuals with any criminal history. Moreover, the IJ has authority to raise the bond or set no bond in addition to lowering it, providing all the more reason for adequate preparation. Finally, if an appeal to the BIA is necessary, having a well-developed record, including written documentation, may improve the chances of success on appeal. For these reasons, it may be wise for the respondent to seek a continuance at his or her initial appearance in immigration court, rather than going forward with a bond hearing that day, in order to prepare adequately.²⁴⁶ In the alternative, the respondent may wish to withdraw the request for a bond hearing without prejudice and subsequently file a motion requesting one when he or she is ready to proceed.

²⁴⁴ For other excellent resources providing practice tips for bond hearings, see, for example, MARIA BALDINI-POTERMIN, IMMIGRATION TRIAL HANDBOOK §§ 4:22-34 (2017 Ed.); IMMIGRANT LEGAL RESOURCE CENTER, REMOVAL DEFENSE: DEFENDING IMMIGRANTS IN IMMIGRATION COURT Ch. 6 (2d ed. 2017); Adilene Nunez, A Practitioner's Guide to Bond Issues, 17-02 IMMIGR. BRIEFINGS 1 (Feb. 2017).

²⁴⁵ See 8 CFR § 1003.19(e). For more information, see section IV.C.6 infra discussing the standards for second or successive bond hearings.

²⁴⁶ If the IJ is hesitant to grant a continuance, respondents and practitioners could note that continuing the bond case does not delay the removal proceeding and should be prepared to articulate why a continuance is warranted under the good cause standard.

An important component of preparation is conducting an analysis of likely and possible outcomes of seeking custody redetermination. Knowing the audience (the particular IJ's practices, as well as the local DHS position) is crucial to being able to properly advise a client about the risks and benefits of seeking a bond redetermination. In some cases, there may be a high risk that seeking bond redetermination will cause the IJ to raise the bond, and the client may make an informed decision not to request bond redetermination at a particular time. In any event, it will be important to find out from the client what amount the family can afford and how the bond money will be raised by the family or community. Compare that amount with what is a realistic bond amount that the IJ might set. Ideally, a client wishing to proceed with a bond redetermination hearing will have a plan in place as to which trustworthy person can actually pay the bond and how the money will be collected, although this is not a reason to delay the bond hearing.²⁴⁷

1. Working with Detained Clients

Working with detained clients involves a variety of challenges beyond those present in all removal defense work. As noted in the introduction to this guide, detained respondents have their cases heard on an expedited docket, meaning there is less time to prepare the case. Representative-client communication is more challenging, and in-person visits require travel and advance planning. It is more difficult for the detained client to assist the representative in preparing the case, since he or she lacks the ability to freely gather documents and cannot attend meetings at the representative's office. Given these challenges, it is all the more important for practitioners representing detained clients do so with careful planning and organization that maximizes detention visits and preparation time.

Locating a Detained Client. If a client is detained in immigration custody but his or her location is unknown, the practitioner can search for the client using the ICE Online Detainee Locator System.²⁴⁸ This online tool allows a search either using the subject's alien registration number (also known as an "A" number) and country of birth, or by first and last name and country of birth. It has English, Spanish, French, Portuguese, Russian, Somali, Vietnamese, and Chinese options. If the practitioner does not have a required piece of information or the individual is not showing up in the online system, the practitioner can contact the local ERO office, provide a signed Form G-28, and ask about the detained individual's location.²⁴⁹ Practitioners may also be able to search online jail rosters of the detention facilities with immigration beds in their area. Family members are often the best source in timely locating a detained individual.

Communicating with a Detained Client. Telephone communication procedures at detention centers vary. Practitioners should contact the detention center where the client is detained to find out procedures for legal representative calls. For example, it may be possible to get on the detention center's legal representative call list such that clients can make direct calls to the law office free of charge. It may be wise to establish a communication protocol with the detained client, such as having a particular day and time every week during which the client will call the practitioner. Practitioners should take care in terms of the substance of phone conversations, given that jail phone calls are typically recorded and their contents may be turned over to the police or prosecutor. Practitioners should inquire about steps that need to be taken to ensure that representative/client calls are confidential and not recorded, and their contents viewed as privileged. Even if the calls are not recorded, practitioners should be aware that jail guards or other detained individuals may be within earshot of the client. For written correspondence, attorneys should label all mail sent to a detained individual as “privileged attorney-client communication.”

²⁴⁷ Identifying a trustworthy individual is important because often that person is paying the bond but the money comes from other sources, such as the client's family, who want the money returned to them when the bond is cancelled. For information on who can pay a bond, see section IV.C.1 infra.

²⁴⁸ The detainee locator tool is found on the ICE website, locator.ice.gov/odls/#/index.

²⁴⁹ A list of ICE ERO field offices can be found on the ICE website, www.ice.gov/contact/ero (last updated Jan. 3, 2018).

In-Person Visits. Practitioners should learn the legal visitation procedures governing the particular detention center, including visitation hours, what documents the practitioner must bring to the visit (such as forms of identification), what materials are prohibited, and whether the practitioner must complete a pre-clearance process before arriving at the facility. Practitioners may learn this information by contacting the detention center. It is also helpful to speak with other practitioners who have recent experience with visits at the facility to learn more about best practices. If the facility is served by a LOP,²⁵⁰ the LOP staff would be a good source for this information.

Given the logistical challenges of visiting detained clients, practitioners should prepare carefully in advance to make the most of each visit. This will include bringing any documents that require the client’s signature, such as medical and non-medical releases, retainer agreement, records request forms to obtain immigration and criminal records, Form G-28, etc. In order to gain as much pertinent information as possible, it is also helpful to prepare a detailed checklist or outline covering the various questions and topics the practitioner needs to discuss with the detained client. Practitioners may wish to develop a detained client intake tool or screening questionnaire for use in such cases. In addition to gathering information and executing release forms from the client, another important aspect of the meeting will be to obtain information from the client about other people to contact to obtain supporting information. In the bond context, this would include individuals who may be able to write a declaration in support of the client’s release on bond, who have documents pertinent to the bond proceeding, or who may be willing to testify on behalf of the client at a bond hearing. Of course, any time a practitioner wishes to contact a third party or share information related to a client’s case, it is important to obtain the client’s permission. This is best done through a written release form. It is also wise to find out if there is any particular information the client does not want shared with a third party. For example, a client may not want individuals to know about his or her criminal history. However, it is best practice that individuals who will be submitting a supporting declaration or testifying during the bond hearing know the client’s background, including negative aspects, so that their declaration will be given full evidentiary value and they are not taken by surprise during cross examination. These discussions with the client will help inform whom the practitioner can and should contact.

As with any client representation, it is important from the outset to establish clear expectations and promote the client’s informed decision-making. For example, if the practitioner’s representation of the client is limited to the bond hearing, it is crucial that the client understand and consent to this limited scope representation. The client should understand the mechanics of a bond hearing and the removal proceedings, which allow the IJ to switch from one proceeding to the other. In a limited representation agreement, the representative will represent the client only during bond proceedings, which may cause confusion when the IJ turns to the removal proceedings and asks the respondent if he or she wants additional time to find legal representation. The practitioner will want to explain to the client why the IJ is asking the question regarding additional time to find representation for the removal proceedings, and that the answer to the IJ’s question regarding a continuance should be “yes.”

250 EOIR, Legal Orientation Program, www.justice.gov/eoir/legal-orientation-program (updated Apr. 25, 2018).

It is wise to review and sign a written representation agreement with the detained client and discuss it thoroughly. The representation agreement should specify the scope of the representation, including whether or not the agreement includes representation in the event of appeal. Practitioners should also provide the client with an approximate timeline for the case's progress. They should give the client the various possible and likely outcomes (release, IJ setting a bond the client cannot pay, no bond, etc.) that could result from the bond hearing. If the client wishes to go forward with the bond hearing, it is important to discuss before the hearing what the client wants to do if the result at the end of the hearing is not favorable. For example, in what circumstances will the client want to reserve appeal? If the practitioner has not had recent experiences with cases containing similar facts, he or she may wish to reach out to other practitioners who have recently handled bond hearings before the same IJ with similar facts. In order to maximize the client's ability to participate in the representation and assist with the case, practitioners should ensure that the client understands the legal standards and burden of proof in the bond context.²⁵¹ When counseling a client about bond prospects, it is important to keep in mind that detained respondents may have an inaccurate understanding about bond practices based on what they hear from other detained individuals. Practitioners should remind clients that each case is different and that what happened to one person may be very different than what happens in the client's case.

2. Records Gathering and Fact Development

Gathering and reviewing pertinent records, and developing favorable evidence in support of a client's release on bond, are crucial parts of successful bond hearing preparation. Practitioners should think about records that already exist, and also about what kinds of records could be developed to strengthen the case. With respect to the former category, practitioners will want to obtain and review any pertinent records. Obtaining a document for review is different than deciding whether or not to submit the document. Practitioners should always carefully review all possible evidence to decide whether that evidence is helpful or harmful to the client's case.

Obtaining Existing Records. Given the IJ's wide discretion in the bond context and the non-exclusive list of bond factors,²⁵² practitioners should think creatively about what records exist that could bear on the IJ's bond decision – both those that would support release and those that might be viewed as negative.

Examples of positive records that should be gathered if they already exist include:

- Certificates of completion of any programming, such as for substance abuse classes
- Documentation of mental health counseling or efforts to address other issues causing criminal activity
- Lease, mortgage, or other documentation showing the client's fixed address, length of residence in the United States, and that the client has a place to live if released
- Birth certificates, marriage certificate, and other citizenship/immigration documentation showing the client's family ties, particularly where the family member has U.S. citizenship or lawful immigration status

²⁵¹ See supra section III.H.1.

²⁵² See supra section III.H.

- Records showing that the client has paid taxes in the United States²⁵³
- Employment records showing a steady employment history²⁵⁴
- Documentation, if any, establishing the client's potential immigration relief, such as a law enforcement certification form for U nonimmigrant status or evidence showing that the client has a pending application for immigration relief, such as a receipt notice
- School or educational records, including transcripts, showing the client's participation in or completion of educational programs, such as a diploma or GED
- Documents showing the client's community involvement or recognition, such as volunteer certificates or awards
- Documentation showing the client's charitable contributions
- Documentation showing that the client has registered for the Selective Service
- Documentation showing any medical conditions of the client or family members. Practitioners should consider filing medical records requests with the detention facility (with a signed authorization for release of information) to support any arguments about the client's health, and
- If relevant, records showing that the client showed up to past court appearances.

Examples of negative documents that should be gathered if they already exist include:

- The client's criminal record, including any arrest or police reports, criminal complaints, and conviction records. It is best practice to review the complete criminal record and not simply those law enforcement encounters that led to a conviction, because DHS will likely argue (and the BIA has held) that arrests and pending charges are relevant to the client's dangerousness
- The client's immigration history, such as documentation of prior immigration violations or misrepresentation. This will include any record of unlawful entry into the United States
- Any evidence suggesting that the client has attempted to flee prosecution or escape from authorities in the past, including bench warrants issued for failure to appear at criminal court proceedings
- Allegations by DHS of gang ties or criminal history in the client's home country, and
- Any evidence of a transient lifestyle or lack of community ties.

The negative records are important to review because DHS could obtain and introduce such evidence and the practitioner will want to have a mitigation strategy for how to deal with such records, including any necessary objections.²⁵⁵ For example, in some jurisdictions DHS frequently files RAP sheets, which are not proof of ²⁵³ Practitioners should carefully review tax documents before submission to ensure that the client properly filed the taxes and that there were no misrepresentations or other problematic issues.

²⁵⁴ Practitioners should inquire as to whether the client completed an I-9 and what status was noted on that document, and try to get a copy of the I-9 to ensure that there was no false claim to U.S. citizenship made or other exposure to criminal liability such as for identity theft.

²⁵⁵ For mitigation ideas, see section IV.A.5 infra.

convictions and should be objected to where they are unreliable or harmful.²⁵⁶ These types of negative allegations will also frequently be found on Form I-213, Record of Deportable/Inadmissible Alien, a document that DHS prepares when it processes an individual for removal. Further, given the respondent's burden in bond proceedings, an IJ may ask the respondent to submit certain records such as a criminal complaint in which case the respondent should comply while citing any objections for the record. Whether or not the IJ requests any particular record or the practitioner decides to submit any particular evidence, it is important to review all records in order to provide accurate information to the court about the client's criminal history.

Developing Evidence Supporting Release on Bond.²⁵⁷ In developing bond evidence, practitioners should remember that they are not limited by what records already exist; often the best bond evidence is developed in the course of preparation for the bond hearing. This requires creativity and persistence on the part of the practitioner. In thinking about what evidence could be developed, practitioners should go through the bond factors and consider what types of evidence could be presented to establish each factor.²⁵⁸ For example, in establishing that the client's release would not pose a danger to the community, consider what documentation could be developed to support such a finding. This might include letters of support from rehabilitation programs, evidence that the client's criminal record did not involve harm to persons or property, or evidence that many years have passed since any unlawful conduct.

Examples of evidence supporting release that could be developed include:

- Declarations or letters of support attesting to the client's good character and responsibility from family members, friends, co-workers, neighbors, clergy, and other community members
- Declarations or letters of support from school staff if the client or the client's child is in school
- Declaration or letter of support from the client's employer, if the client has valid work authorization²⁵⁹
- Declarations, letters, or program information from social workers or organizations that can accept the client into drug/alcohol rehabilitation programs, domestic violence/anger management class, job training, etc.
- Psychological evaluation or proof that the client has been or will be attending therapy or a support group upon release, and
- If the client lacks a sponsor and may be deemed a flight risk or if he or she requires some type of rehabilitation (such as for substance abuse or anger issues resulting in domestic violence incidents), evidence of a fully developed post-release plan. The plan should articulate the client's intended next steps once released from detention and address issues such as transportation, housing, and treatment programs. Documentation of what the release plan would be if the person needs programmatic support may include a printout of the local Alcoholics Anonymous schedule, acceptance into a residential treatment

²⁵⁶ Cf. Francis v. Gonzales, 442 F.3d 131, 143 (2d Cir. 2006) (stating, in removal proceedings context, that "[r]ap sheets lack the necessary information to describe the full record of conviction and do not necessarily emanate from a neutral, reliable source.").

²⁵⁷ For more ideas about bond hearing evidence, see the resources cited in note 244 supra.

²⁵⁸ For a summary of factors that IJs consider in bond hearings, see section III.H supra.

²⁵⁹ Employers may be concerned about the risks of writing a letter of support, especially if the client lacks an employment authorization document. Practitioners should take care to avoid a conflict of interest when such questions arise.

program, or evidence of the individual's transportation plan if he or she cannot legally drive.

Practice Tip on Developing an Effective Declaration. An effective declaration or letter submitted on behalf of a detained client seeking bond should state who the declarant is and how he or she knows the respondent. It should provide specific details supporting the respondent's release on bond. The declarant should be asked to include a phone number and should be warned of the unlikely possibility that DHS (or the IJ during the hearing) could call him or her to verify the information. It is best that only individuals who have lawful immigration status in the United States, preferably U.S. citizens or lawful permanent residents, submit documents in immigration court or appear at court in support of a respondent. If the declarant asks the representative about the risks or consequences of submitting a declaration or letter or of coming to court, the representative might have a conflict of interest and may need to recommend that the person seek independent advice. Organizations may be able to establish informal cross-referrals, whereby one nonprofit agency represents the declarant while another represents the detained individual.

In some situations, such as where the declarant is illiterate, it may be most effective for the practitioner to draft the declaration based on a conversation with the individual. In other situations, it may be preferable to have the declarant prepare the first draft and then the practitioner can edit or polish it. In such situations, practitioners should give the declarant specific suggestions about the content, organization, and format to follow.

An effective declaration or letter should contain sufficient detail and describe how the declarant knows that the person is neither a flight risk nor is dangerous. This will require, where the respondent has a criminal history, that the declarant indicate his or her knowledge of the criminal history. For example, it could include words to the effect that "I have been informed that [name] was arrested by ICE because of pending charges for [X]." Where true, it can be helpful to include details, such as that a neighbor has had the respondent babysit for his or her children despite knowing of the respondent's past arrest for a DUI, or that a family member has pledged to provide transportation (for a respondent who cannot drive, or is prohibited from driving), housing, or other support.

All declarations must follow the Immigration Court Practice Manual. The document should include language such as: "I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my knowledge," followed by the date, signature, and printed name of the person signing.²⁶⁰ Practitioners are encouraged to attach a copy of the declarant's government-issued identification. They should also follow the Practice Manual's directions on foreign language translations. If a document is in a language other than English, it must be accompanied by an English translation along with a certificate of translation.²⁶¹ The certificate of translation must be signed by the translator who states that he or she is fluent in both languages, and that the translation is true and accurate to the best of his or her knowledge and abilities.²⁶²

3. Submitting Documents in Advance of the Bond Hearing

When preparing and submitting documents to the immigration court, it is important to review and follow

²⁶⁰ See Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Glossary, Declaration Under Penalty of Perjury.

²⁶¹ See id. Ch. 3.3(a) & Appendix H (Sample Certificate of Translation).

²⁶² See id. Ch. 3.3(a).

the Immigration Court Practice Manual. Note that there is a chapter devoted to bond proceedings, as well as other sections that discuss immigration court filings and provide sample documents. In addition, practitioners should reach out to experienced local practitioners who may have further insight on any preferences or practices of the particular immigration court or IJ. The practitioner may also be able to contact the immigration court administrator when procedural questions arise.²⁶³

Preparing and Filing a Motion for a Bond Redetermination

If a bond hearing has not already been scheduled, practitioners can file a motion requesting a bond redetermination. This could be coupled with a motion for an expedited hearing. Even if a bond hearing has been scheduled, if the client wishes to have a bond hearing held sooner, the practitioner can consider a motion to advance the bond hearing date. Note, however, that motions to expedite the hearing or advance a hearing date may be unlikely to be granted given the immigration court backlog and the growing detained dockets across the country.²⁶⁴ In many situations, it may be better to use the time to prepare a compelling bond packet.

Timing. An individual detained in immigration custody may request that a bond hearing be set even if the NTA has not yet been filed.²⁶⁵ Some detained respondents may not be automatically scheduled for a bond hearing because they did not know to ask for a custody redetermination. Once the immigration court receives a bond hearing request, it should schedule a bond hearing “for the earliest possible date.”²⁶⁶ However, in some jurisdictions the initial bond hearing is scheduled concurrently with the first master calendar hearing. Given the volume of cases and court backlogs, this could be weeks or more after the person is detained.

Contents of a Request for Bond Redetermination. The request for a bond redetermination should include the individual’s full name and “A” number, the detention facility where the individual is detained, and the bond amount set by ICE, if any.²⁶⁷ It is also helpful to note the detained client’s primary language. If this is the practitioner’s first appearance in the case, he or she should also file Form EOIR-28, Notice of Entry of Appearance as Attorney or Representative Before the Immigration Court.²⁶⁸ The practitioner should indicate whether he or she is entering an appearance for bond proceedings only or for all proceedings. If no NTA has yet been filed with the immigration court, the practitioner must file a paper version of Form EOIR-28, preferably on green paper, and serve OCC.²⁶⁹ Otherwise, the practitioner may file the EOIR-28 electronically, but must remember to still serve OCC.

263 A list of immigration courts with contact information including phone numbers is available on the EOIR website. EOIR, EOIR Immigration Court Listing, www.justice.gov/eoir/eoir-immigration-court-listing (updated Apr. 27, 2018).

264 For data on the immigration court backlog, see TRACImmigration, Immigration Court Backlog Tool, trac.syr.edu/phptools/immigration/court_backlog (showing 692,298 pending cases through March 2018) (last visited May 2, 2018).

265 See supra section III.C.

266 Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Ch. 9.3(d); see also Memorandum from James R. McHenry III, Dir., EOIR, Case Priorities and Immigration Court Performance Measures, at 7 app.A (Jan. 17, 2018), www.lexisnexis.com/legalnewsroom/immigration/b/immigration-law-blog/archive/2018/01/18/eoir-memo-case-priorities-and-immigration-court-performance-measures-jan-17-2018.aspx?Redirected=true&Redirected=true (directing that 90 percent of all custody determinations be completed within 14 days of the request).

267 Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Ch. 9.3(c)(i).

268 Form EOIR-28 can be downloaded from the EOIR website, www.justice.gov/sites/default/files/pages/attachments/2015/07/24/eoir28.pdf.

269 Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Ch. 2.1(b)(ii).

The motion for a bond redetermination may be accompanied by a supporting brief. While it is a best practice to file a brief in advance of the hearing where possible so that the IJ may have time to review it prior to the hearing, practitioners may also file any documents at the bond hearing.²⁷⁰ Because some IJs have limited time for oral argument at the hearing, submitting a brief is an important part of making the case to the IJ and creating a record for possible appeal. Practitioners should argue using the legal framework and relevant factors for bond discussed in section III.H above and use the bond brief as a tool to mitigate the damaging effect of any negative factors as discussed below.²⁷¹ Practitioners may want to draw on published or unpublished BIA cases to argue why the client should be released on bond.

In practice, given the time constraints in bond proceedings, many practitioners do not submit a brief. In more straightforward cases, a brief may not be needed where the practitioner has presented succinct oral argument and persuasive documentary submissions. Where the practitioner concludes that a brief may be helpful, often a short letter brief may be sufficient. To preserve the best record for appeal, practitioners should take care not to admit facts (such as the fact of a conviction or of alienage) in written submissions or during any bond proceedings that would prove grounds of deportability or inadmissibility, if the client plans to contest those charges or pursue suppression of evidence of alienage. This highlights why it is important, particularly for a practitioner engaged in bond-only representation, to think beyond bond to the larger case strategy.²⁷² Remember, however, that bond proceedings must be kept separate and apart from removal proceedings.²⁷³

Service. As with all filings, the bond redetermination request must be served on ICE OCC.²⁷⁴ The Immigration Court Practice Manual contains a sample proof of service.²⁷⁵

Preparing and Filing Supplemental Documents in Support of Bond

The practitioner may submit supporting documents in advance of the hearing, along with the bond hearing request, or as a separate packet with a cover page labeled “BOND PROCEEDINGS”²⁷⁶ or “Respondent’s Evidence in Support of Custody Redetermination.” The cover page should state “DETAINED” in the top right corner.²⁷⁷ The filing should include an index of the documents or table of contents. The practitioner may also submit the documents in open court during the bond hearing, unless the IJ has ordered a document filing deadline.²⁷⁸ If a practitioner wants documents filed in the removal proceedings to be considered in the bond proceeding, those documents must be separately submitted in the bond proceeding.²⁷⁹

²⁷⁰ Id. Ch. 9.3(e)(v) (unless the IJ directs otherwise).

²⁷¹ For tips on mitigating negative facts or evidence, see discussion infra below at section IV.A.5.

²⁷² For further discussion, see, for example, BALDINI-POTERMIN, supra note 244, § 4:24.

²⁷³ See supra note 168 and accompanying text discussing courts’ disagreement about whether, and in what circumstances, evidence from the bond proceeding may be considered in the removal proceeding.

²⁷⁴ A list of ICE Principal Legal Advisor offices (OCC) can be found on the ICE website, www.ice.gov/contact/legal (last updated Jan. 3, 2018).

²⁷⁵ Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Appendix G.

²⁷⁶ Id. Ch. 9.3(e)(v).

²⁷⁷ Id. Ch. 3.3(c)(vi).

²⁷⁸ Id. Ch. 9.3(e)(v).

²⁷⁹ Id.; see also supra section III.E.

Prior to submitting any documents to the court, the practitioner should carefully review the documents to ensure that they do not contain prejudicial information or inconsistencies and that they support the request for bond. The practitioner should also review the proposed document submission with the client so that he or she is familiar with what will be submitted and can be better prepared for any cross examination. The practitioner must ensure that the client consents to the documents being shared with the court and ICE OCC. Remember that it is one thing for the client to sign a release allowing a third party (such as a hospital) to share records with the client's representative, but it is another for the client to consent to confidential records being shared by the representative with ICE OCC and the immigration court.

4. Hearing Preparation

General Preparation. It is wise for practitioners to take the time to learn about the particular IJ who will be presiding over the bond hearing. If the practitioner has not recently had a bond hearing before this IJ, it may be worthwhile to go to the immigration court and observe the IJ during a detained docket. Some jurisdictions have a detained docket observation project run by the local AILA chapter or nonprofit groups. The practitioner should also talk to experienced local practitioners about their recent experiences before this IJ in the bond hearing context. For example, does the IJ allow for witness testimony? What kinds of questions, if any, does the IJ ask of the respondent? What kind of evidence does the IJ want to see and what will likely be an obstacle to granting bond for the IJ? What is a realistic amount of bond that this IJ may set? Discovering this information will allow the practitioner to prepare tailored arguments and to better prepare the client for any testimony.

Approaching the DHS Attorney. Whether it will be helpful to approach the ICE OCC attorney ahead of time to find out DHS's position on bond and determine if the parties can come to an agreement about a bond amount may depend on the ICE OCC office and the assigned attorney. One advantage of contacting ICE OCC ahead of time (in addition to potentially reaching an agreement to a bond amount) is to advise the ICE OCC attorney of particular facts in a case. Even if the ICE OCC attorney cannot or will not agree to a bond amount, he or she does not have to aggressively fight bond in every case and could signal a lack of strong opposition to bond or waive appeal at the conclusion of the bond hearing. A practitioner could contact the ICE OCC attorney in advance of the hearing by phone²⁸⁰ or approach the ICE OCC attorney immediately prior to the bond hearing at the immigration court. If the practitioner contacts the ICE OCC attorney ahead of time and it is not possible to reach an agreement, reaching out ahead of time might help give the practitioner a sense of what ICE OCC's arguments against bond will be, which would allow for more tailored preparation. Reaching out also provides the practitioner an opportunity to ask for a copy of the client's NTA and Form I-213 from the ICE OCC attorney or the client's deportation officer, though the likelihood that this request will be successful may vary greatly by jurisdiction.²⁸¹ These documents assist the practitioner in better understanding what information the government has and in preparing successfully for the hearing.

Requesting Testimony. Unlike merits hearings in which the respondent is expected to testify, not all IJs expect or find it necessary for a respondent or other witnesses to testify in bond hearings. Those IJs may instead expect an offer of proof from the representative and/or a written declaration.²⁸² These alternatives to oral testimony allow IJs to keep the bond hearing brief. While written declarations help IJs manage their ever-increasing detained dockets, they do not guarantee that the IJ has carefully read the testimony. As such, and if the pros and cons of the testimony have been carefully assessed, practitioners should orally or in writing move for leave for the respondent and any other witnesses to testify and submit a witness list, if requested. If the IJ denies the motion and then disregards information in the declaration, the due process issue is preserved for appeal.²⁸³ Practitioners should reach out to other local practitioners to find out the typical practice in their jurisdiction and of the specific IJ who will be proceeding over the bond hearing.

²⁸⁰ The practitioner will need to have either a Form EOIR-28 on file or provide a signed Form G-28 to the ICE OCC attorney in order to have a conversation about a particular case.

²⁸¹ If ICE OCC refuses to provide the Form I-213 before the hearing but seeks to introduce it into evidence at the bond hearing, practitioners should request a continuance to review and discuss the Form I-213 with the client.

Preparing the Client for Testimony. A respondent may or may not testify at a bond hearing; the IJ may prefer that the representative provide an offer of proof describing what the testimony would include.²⁸⁴ Some, but not all, IJs who prefer testimony at the bond hearing will place the client under oath before taking testimony. Whether or not the respondent presents affirmative testimony, the ICE OCC attorney may cross examine the respondent and the IJ may also question the respondent, so the client must be prepared to testify. The practitioner should determine the pros and cons of the client's presenting affirmative testimony, including the likelihood that the respondent will even be permitted to testify or will be questioned by the ICE OCC attorney or the IJ. Practitioners should be mindful of the potential damaging consequences of a respondent's testimony in bond proceedings -- not only for bond prospects but also in the removal case -- as some IJs have relied on information offered during the bond hearing in making a decision in the removal hearing.²⁸⁵ Since bond records are to be kept separate and apart from the removal hearing, practitioners can object to an IJ's use of information presented in the bond hearing in the subsequent removal hearing. However, since this argument is not guaranteed to prevail and since DHS could seek to introduce evidence presented during the bond hearing in the removal proceeding, respondents testifying under oath in bond proceedings should take care to avoid inconsistencies or raising issues that may impact the removal case.

Preparing the Client for Direct Examination. If the practitioner determines that it would be beneficial for the client to testify affirmatively during the bond hearing, the practitioner should prepare the client in advance for this testimony. In some jurisdictions, the IJ may require the respondent to testify, regardless of his or her desires.

282 For example, in San Francisco it is common for respondents to testify at bond hearings, while in Baltimore IJs generally prefer a written declaration.

283 Practitioners might cite to U.S. courts of appeal cases in their jurisdiction that consider due process violations generally in removal proceedings. See, e.g., Zheng v. Mukasey, 552 F.3d 277, 286 (2d Cir. 2009) (holding that an IJ's failure to give any consideration to "an undeniably probative piece of evidence amounts to a denial of the traditional standards of fairness that due process demands"); Colmenar v. INS, 210 F.3d 967, 971 (9th Cir. 2000) (remanding because of due process violation where respondent "was not given a full and fair hearing or a reasonable opportunity to present evidence on his behalf"). In an unpublished decision, the BIA remanded for further consideration where the IJ had denied bond but the respondent had not been able to testify because no interpreter was provided at the bond hearing. R-L-P, AXXX-XXX-958 (BIA Oct. 12, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/365692961/R-L-P-AXXX-XXX-958-BIA-Oct-12-2017 (concluding that respondent had demonstrated prejudice as required and remanding to provide respondent an opportunity to testify in support of her bond request).

284 Whether or not an offer of proof is used may also depend on whether the ICE OCC attorney objects to its use. However, practitioners should not make an offer of proof unless facts are known and there is corroboration in the record. It is problematic when IJs attempt to elicit testimony from the representative regarding facts that would be prejudicial to the client, for example, where an IJ questions the representative about the facts behind an arrest about which there are pending criminal charges. See infra section IV.A.5 (discussion beginning with heading "Showing Lack of Dangerousness Where There Are Pending Criminal Charges Against the Respondent").

285 See supra notes 168-69 and accompanying text.

It is crucial to investigate local practices in bond proceedings in order to adequately prepare. In general, it is better to prepare the client in case he or she is forced to testify, rather than to be underprepared. The practitioner will want to share with the client the non-leading questions he or she plans to ask during direct examination and practice those questions with the client.²⁸⁶ The practitioner should explain to the client the reason for these non-leading questions. The practitioner will also want to remind the client about the burden of proof and legal framework for bond proceedings, and point out the good and bad facts in the client's case. The practitioner should discuss with the client successful ways of communicating those facts during direct examination. Depending on the client's literacy level and learning style, it may be helpful to use written descriptions or visual aids to educate the client about the bond hearing and relevant testimony. The practitioner should ensure that the client is comfortable stating when he or she does not understand a question. This will be particularly important if it is difficult to secure an interpreter who is fluent in the respondent's best language or dialect but the respondent nevertheless wants to proceed.

Preparing the Client for Cross Examination and Questions by the IJ. The client should be prepared for cross examination by the ICE OCC attorney and questioning by the IJ. The practitioner should explain to the client that the ICE OCC attorney will likely ask questions that call for a yes or no answer. The practitioner can explain that during a good cross examination, the government will essentially be testifying and will try to get the client to agree to its version of the facts. The practitioner should further explain that after the cross, he or she will have a chance to try to remedy any damage or clarify confusion through re-direct examination. Practitioners should find out ahead of time what kinds of questions the IJ and the ICE OCC attorney will likely ask, so that he or she can best prepare the client. Some common questions that may be directed at the respondent include any smuggling history, prior immigration violations including how the individual arrived in the United States, gang interactions or association, with whom the respondent lives, family relationships and closeness to those family members, any past use of controlled substances, and criminal history.²⁸⁷ Practitioners should have the client practice pausing after every question to give the practitioner time to make any necessary objection. Clients should be instructed to think before answering a question, to answer only the question asked, and to ask for clarification if he or she does not understand a question. Practitioners can explain that generally brief answers will be more appropriate, as long answers tend to be not well thought out and can create other problems during cross examination.

Preparing the Client for Testimony Using an Interpreter. The client should be directed to immediately alert the IJ if he or she has problems understanding the interpreter. In general, the client should also be empowered to answer "I don't know" or "I don't remember" if those answers are accurate, rather than guessing at something the client does not know. The client should be informed that if she or she does not understand a question, he or she should state this and ask that the question be rephrased. It is wise to have the client practice asserting these responses prior to the hearing. Clients should be instructed to wait for the interpreter to restate the question in his or her language before answering it. If the practitioner does not speak and understand the client's language, it is wise to have a family or community member present at the bond proceeding who is fluent in both English and the client's language. That person can alert the practitioner if there is inaccurate interpretation.

²⁸⁶ For further resources on trial skills, including preparing effective direct examinations, practitioners may want to consider resources and trainings, such as immigration court advocacy specific trainings provided by the National Institute for Trial Advocacy, www.nita.org.

²⁸⁷ See BALDINI-POTERMIN, supra note 244, § 4:28.

Preparing Other Witnesses for Testimony. The IJ may or may not allow witnesses to testify at the bond hearing. Practitioners should inquire in advance with colleagues or the local court clerk about whether witnesses will likely be permitted to testify, and if there are any restrictions, such as minors not being permitted to testify. Practitioners should also inquire with colleagues about what kinds of questions the IJ and the ICE OCC attorney will likely ask. Among other things, ICE OCC may ask the witness about how he or she entered the United States, how he or she acquired lawful immigration status, and where he or she lives and works. Thus it is best for a witness to be a U.S. citizen or lawful permanent resident to minimize risk of negative consequences to the witness.

Practitioners should take time to prepare any witness who may testify. As with client preparation, the practitioner will want to share with the witness the questions he or she plans to ask and educate the witness about the burden of proof and legal framework for bond proceedings. The practitioner should highlight the aspects of the witness's testimony that would be most relevant to the client's release on bond and discuss successful ways of communicating those facts. Likewise, the witness should be informed about how to raise communication problems if there is an interpreter, and to answer "I don't know," "I don't remember," or "I don't understand" when those responses are true. The witness should also be prepared for cross examination by the OCC attorney and questioning by the IJ. The witness should practice pausing briefly after questions on cross examination to give the practitioner time to make any necessary objection and for the witness to control his or her nerves. Witnesses should be reminded to think before answering a question, and to answer only the question asked.

Sometimes, such as in cases involving domestic violence allegations or convictions, a domestic partner or other victim will seek to provide written or oral testimony supporting release on bond. Practitioners should take special care in these situations. Practitioners must examine whether there is any no-contact order in place that would prohibit the practitioner from communicating with the victim, as an agent of the respondent. The IJ may want to question this type of witness about whether he or she is really afraid of the respondent, and about how the witness's prior claims resulting in the domestic violence allegations are consistent with the witness's desire that the respondent be released. Furthermore, the ICE OCC attorney could refer the witness to state prosecutors for making a false police report if the witness's testimony in the bond proceeding contradicts the allegations made against the respondent in the underlying criminal matter. Witnesses should be carefully prepared for written or oral testimony. Practitioners should also consider whether there are ethical issues that would prevent speaking or working with a witness whose interests might be adverse to the client, and whether separate representation is needed. At a minimum, the practitioner should confirm in writing with the witness that he or she represents the respondent, not the witness.

Finally, if a witness's testimony is important but for some reason his or her physical appearance in court on the day of the hearing is not possible, practitioners can move for leave to present telephonic testimony.²⁸⁸

Preparing for Cross of DHS Witnesses. It is rare that DHS would present a witness at a bond hearing. However, if DHS does present any witnesses, respondents have the right to cross examine them.²⁸⁹ Practitioners ²⁸⁸ The requirements for such motions can be found in the Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Ch. 4.15(o)(iii).

²⁸⁹ Note that a bond hearing where the government has the burden to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the non-citizen requires continued detention because he or she poses a danger or is a flight risk will also require that ICE conduct the direct examination and the practitioner conduct the cross examination.

should prepare in advance for cross examination of any DHS witnesses. If the practitioner is not advised ahead of time that DHS intends to present a witness, he or she may object or seek a recess or continuance in order to prepare.

5. Mitigating Harmful Evidence, Facts, or Allegations Suggesting Dangerousness

In many cases, success or failure in seeking bond will come down to dealing with harmful or irrelevant evidence or facts that DHS will argue shows that the respondent is dangerous and should not be released. BIA case law puts the burden on the respondent to prove that he or she would not pose a danger to the community if released, and states that the dangerousness analysis is binary—either the respondent poses a danger and should not be released, or the respondent does not pose a danger and may be released taking into consideration factors to determine the level of flight risk.²⁹⁰ For this reason, it will be crucial for practitioners to develop a strategy as to how to combat any harmful or irrelevant evidence or allegations in order to prove to the IJ that the respondent does not pose a danger. The following discussion provides preliminary tips about devising strategies to combat a dangerousness finding based on various types of “bad” evidence or facts.

Showing Lack of Dangerousness Where the Respondent Has Criminal Conviction(s)

If the respondent has prior criminal convictions, the practitioner will want to analyze each one to determine best arguments about lack of present dangerousness. Factors to consider in constructing successful arguments may include:

- Lack of recency of any criminal activity
- Lack of any victim or damage to property resulting from the criminal activity²⁹¹
- Showing that the criminal conduct was accidental or “at worst, reckless,” along with other positive factors such as family and community ties and eligibility for relief²⁹²
- The offense was treated as minor by the criminal adjudicative body, for example that it was classified as a “petty” offense, misdemeanor, or that the person was not sentenced to any jail time
- If there was a victim, having a declaration or testimony from the victim supporting the respondent’s release and providing further context to support a showing that the respondent does not pose a danger to the community²⁹³
- If the client has any family or friends in law enforcement, a letter from that person discussing lack of ²⁹⁰ See supra section III.H.

²⁹¹ See, e.g., E-D-J-F-T, AXXX XXX 302 (BIA May 19, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/351903730/E-D-J-F-T-AXXX-XXX-302-BIA-May-19-2017 (dismissing DHS appeal of a $10,000 bond where the respondent had a 2016 DUI conviction that had not resulted in any injury to persons or property, had a newborn U.S. citizen child, and the child’s mother was seeking asylum). Practitioners could seek to distinguish Matter of Siniauskas, 27 I&N Dec. 207 (BIA 2018), on this basis, as in that case three of the respondent’s DUI incidents had involved accidents.

²⁹² Eddy Bismarck Nunez-Garrido, A099 115 048 (BIA Feb. 3, 2011) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/155930372/Eddy-Bismarck-Nunez-Garrido-A099-115-048-BIA-Feb-3-2011.

²⁹³ See discussion of caveats to consider when presenting victim testimony, supra in subsection IV.A.4 entitled “Hearing Preparation.”

dangerousness and taking into account the conviction

- Evidence showing the client's rehabilitation, such as attendance in rehabilitation programs (including while in detention) and evidence that the respondent is making efforts to address drug, alcohol, anger, or other problems
- Written declaration or oral testimony from the client evidencing responsibility, remorse, and rehabilitation
- Letters from family or friends stating that they will support the client on release including efforts toward rehabilitation (for example, driving the client to Alcoholics Anonymous meetings)
- Expert evidence, such as a psychological examination, concluding that the client does not pose a danger to the community or is not likely to commit another offense
- Whether the client received good time credits (including listing the relevant factors for receiving those credits), displayed positive behavior while incarcerated, did well on probation, or other evidence that the client was amenable to rehabilitation under the criminal justice system. Consider what evidence might be obtained to establish this, including a letter of recommendation from a probation officer or certificates of completed programming. Practitioners should check to see whether favorable assessments exist that evidence lack of dangerousness or amenability to release. For example, there could be bail assessments, chemical dependency assessments, presentence investigation reports, or records from time in custody in which the respondent was assessed as a good candidate for release within the state criminal justice system
- Any post-release plan that shows, for example, acceptance into a residential alcohol treatment program in the case of a client with a DUI²⁹⁴
- If the respondent is on criminal probation, practitioners may wish to highlight probation tracking mechanisms that will take effect upon release, such as drug or alcohol monitoring and regular check-ins
- Arguments that past convictions are insufficient to establish present or future dangerousness.²⁹⁵ Argue that the IJ must conduct an individualized analysis that considers the recency and seriousness of the convictions as well as the evidence of rehabilitation, and
- If the criminal conduct occurred while the respondent was a juvenile, present scientific studies that

294 See, e.g., E-C-, AXXX XXX 516 (BIA Apr. 20, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/349318995/E-C-XXXX-XXX-516-Bia-April-20-2017 (dismissing DHS's appeal of a $7,500 bond for a respondent with two 2016 DUI convictions, where the IJ's bond order directed that the respondent remain in treatment after release and the respondent had provided evidence of his participation in alcohol rehabilitation programs while in detention, his enrollment in a residential treatment program if released, and his family support). While the BIA in Matter of Siniauskas concluded that the respondent's evidence of rehabilitation including evidence of participation in Alcoholics Anonymous and medical treatment was insufficient to prove lack of dangerousness following multiple DUIs, in that case the BIA noted that the mitigation factors the respondent presented had "existed prior to his most recent arrest, and . . . did not deter his conduct." 27 I&N Dec. 207, 210 (BIA 2018).

295 Cf. United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 750 (1987) (upholding constitutionality of pretrial detention scheme found in Bail Reform Act that allowed for detention of those accused of "extremely serious offenses" after a "full-blown adversary hearing" in which the government has the burden to prove by clear and convincing evidence that "no conditions of release can reasonably assure the safety of the community or any person"); Chi Thon Ngo v. INS., 192 F.3d 390, 398 (3d Cir. 1999) (noting that, in context of individual detained for a prolonged period after an order of removal, "presenting danger to the community at one point by committing crime does not place them forever beyond redemption").

suggest that delinquent conduct as a minor is not representative of how the individual will behave as an adult with a fully developed brain.²⁹⁶

Showing Lack of Dangerousness Where There Are Pending Criminal Charges Against the Respondent

As an initial matter, practitioners should consider whether the client's chances for a good bond outcome would be increased if the client postponed the bond hearing and sought to resolve the pending criminal charges first. This may be a particularly useful strategy if the pending charges are serious or a conviction would cause mandatory detention and it is likely that the IJ will deny bond based on them. In some situations, the outcome of pending charges will affect the client's eligibility for relief. If the respondent has a criminal defense attorney, practitioners should reach out to this person and discuss the possibility of having the state court issue a writ to return the client to state custody to face the charges. If there is no criminal defense attorney, practitioners could reach out to local public defenders to find out if one could be appointed, and if not, reach out to or partner with a local criminal defense attorney who can assist with this process. Practitioners should also coordinate with criminal defense counsel to craft a plan for what to do if ICE ignores or refuses to honor the state court writ. If criminal defense counsel is not able to obtain a writ, practitioners can also inquire whether there are other criminal law mechanisms to resolve the pending charge, such as having the client enter a written, favorable plea agreement, dismissal for failure to prosecute, or through speedy trial or mandatory disposition of detainees act provisions.²⁹⁷

When a respondent seeking bond has pending criminal charges, practitioners should expect that DHS will argue that those pending charges establish dangerousness and preclude the respondent's release. The idea that pending charges (even where there has been no determination of guilt) can establish dangerousness is supported by BIA precedent, including in Matter of Siniauskas, 27 I&N Dec. 207 (BIA 2018) and Matter of Guerra, 24 I&N Dec. 37 (BIA 2006). Some IJs may assume that the facts alleged in the underlying arrest or police reports are true. To counter these arguments, practitioners should focus on how the facts in the particular case differ from the Guerra case,²⁹⁸ where the BIA found that the allegations in the criminal complaint were sufficiently "specific and detailed." The purpose is to establish why the proffered evidence is not probative or reliable and thus not deserving of consideration. Practitioners should ground arguments within BIA precedents and also the due process evidentiary framework that governs removal proceedings. Under that framework, the test for whether evidence should be admitted is "whether it is probative and its admission is fundamentally fair."²⁹⁹ If the facts permit, practitioners should point out how in their case, unlike in Guerra:

296 See Laurence Steinberg, A Dual Systems Model of Adolescent Risk-Taking, 52 DEVELOPMENTAL PSYCHOBIOLOGY 216 (Mar. 8, 2010), onlinelibrary.wiley.com/doi/10.1002/dev.20445/pdf.

297 If the client is facing pending federal charges, there may be additional arguments to raise in the federal court criminal proceedings which, if successful, could result in dismissal of the federal case or prevent the client's being transferred to ICE custody upon release from federal criminal custody. See, e.g., United States v. Santos-Flores, 794 F.3d 1088 (9th Cir. 2015) (concluding that existence of an ICE detainer was not an adequate reason to deny release under the Bail Reform Act and that if an individual fails to appear due to having been placed into ICE custody the court may craft an "appropriate remedy"); United States v. Boutin, 260 F. Supp. 3d 24 (E.D.N.Y. 2017), appealed, No. 18-194 (2d Cir. filed Jan. 23, 2018); United States v. Trujillo-Alvarez, 900 F. Supp. 2d 1167 (D. Or. 2012) (ordering that federal criminal defendant who had been ordered released from criminal custody under the Bail Reform Act either be released from ICE custody or federal charge would be dismissed with prejudice).

298 Practitioners could also point out that in Matter of Siniauskas there did not appear to be any challenge to the consideration of the pending DUI charge in the dangerousness analysis, or any dispute about the accuracy of the allegations.

299 Matter of Y-S-L-C-, 26 I&N Dec. 688, 690 (BIA 2015).

- The evidence of the alleged criminal activity is not specific and detailed³⁰⁰
- The source of the allegations is not clear
- The author of the report or complaint is not identified
- There is a history of false charges against the respondent
- The charges are clearly overbroad compared to the conducted alleged, or
- Other reasons exist that raise doubt about the respondent's guilt.

Practitioners could also argue that charging documents are not proof of the alleged conduct described in them, and that although the IJ can look at them, they should not be taken as true given their unreliability and the presumption of innocence.³⁰¹ Of course, a prior conviction for the same or similar charged conduct will make it more difficult to succeed with the above arguments.³⁰²

In Ortega-Rangel v. Sessions, No. 18-cv-01618, 2018 WL 2197560 (N.D. Cal. May 14, 2018), a federal district court ruled that an IJ's denial of bond relying only on the fact of the habeas petitioner's arrest and pending charge for possession for sale of a controlled substance violated due process. The court reasoned that the mere fact of the respondent's arrest was not "probative and specific" evidence as required by Guerra, and contrasted the evidence in the case with the evidence in the Guerra case. The district court noted that the IJ had found that the petitioner had sold drugs but the record did not contain sufficient evidence to show that she had committed the crime she was arrested for. The court noted that that the respondent did not have a criminal record, had not admitted to selling drugs, that there had been no probable cause determination by the state court, and that the sheriff's office declaration did not contain facts that show that she sold drugs. The district court ordered that the IJ conduct a bond hearing compliant with due process within 15 days. Where relevant, practitioners could draw on the reasoning of this case in distinguishing Guerra and Siniauskas and arguing for release on bond for clients with pending charges.

If the charges, even if proven, do not tend to establish that the respondent is dangerous, the practitioner will want to make this argument. Some of the arguments about criminal convictions discussed in the section above may be drawn upon in this context. For example, if the pending charge is for a minor state law infraction that does not carry possible jail time and does not involve any injury to property or persons, the practitioner could argue that this pending allegation is not relevant to the dangerousness analysis.

³⁰⁰ Practitioners may also want to cite United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739 (1987), a case interpreting the provisions of the Bail Reform Act that required the government to prove by clear and convincing evidence that no conditions could reasonably assure the safety of any other person and the community in order to justify pretrial detention. In Salerno, the Supreme Court noted that the government must prove an "identified and articulable threat to an individual or the community" to justify pretrial detention. While the context of civil immigration detention is distinct, practitioners could argue that similar principles apply when weighing unproven allegations and their effect on a dangerousness determination precluding release.

³⁰¹ See also discussion below under subheading "Showing Lack of Dangerousness When DHS Introduces Harmful Allegations, in the Absence of Any Pending Charges or Criminal Convictions" (further discussing potential strategies to challenge allegations in the absence of a conviction and noting relevant case law).

³⁰² Cf. Matter of Siniauskas, 27 I&N Dec. at 209 (no bond warranted where respondent had previous DUI convictions and a recent DUI arrest, noting that he "asserts that he will not repeat his dangerous drinking and driving behavior, but his actions are a better indication of his future conduct than his assurances to the contrary").

Practitioners could also consider arguing, in the context of a respondent with pending domestic violence-related charges, that the fact that there is currently a state court order for protection in place is a mitigating factor, because there will be immediate, state-imposed consequences if the respondent violates the order. Other mitigation arguments in the domestic violence context would include proof that the respondent has moved out or intends to move out, and understands the need to change his or her way of communication. Furthermore, any evidence of the respondent's willingness to enroll in anger management programs or participate in therapy may lend weight to stated intention to rehabilitate.

For a pending DUI charge, mitigation arguments might include showing that the respondent has arranged for other means of transportation, such as selling the car or stating that he or she understands that he or she is not permitted to drive and will not drive if released. Family and friends writing supporting declarations can include their intention to provide transportation to the respondent if released. The respondent may also include evidence that he or she intends to use public transportation. In some cases, substance abuse treatment programs will allow individuals who are detained to make appointments to initiate services even if still in ICE custody. In sum, the mitigation arguments and documentation should be tailored to the nature of the alleged criminal activity. Practitioners should seek to distinguish Matter of Siniauskas, 27 I&N Dec. 207 (BIA 2018), where the BIA concluded that no bond should be set for a respondent with a pending DUI charge and previous DUI convictions. Section III.H.2 above provides some ideas for how this case might be distinguished.³⁰³

Invoking the Fifth Amendment Privilege. If the respondent chooses to go forward with the bond hearing while criminal charges are pending or if there are arrests that have not yet led to a conviction, practitioners should prepare the client for what to do if the ICE OCC attorney or the IJ asks the client questions about the underlying conduct. Answering such questions could implicate the client's Fifth Amendment rights against self-incrimination and prejudice the client's options in future criminal proceedings.³⁰⁴ If the client has a criminal defense attorney, it would be wise to consult with this person in developing a strategy. Even if there is no criminal defense attorney, practitioners should consult with a criminal defense attorney about the options. Practitioners should consider possible strategies and thoroughly inform the client of his or her rights and the consequences of answering the questions, and provide the client with careful advice before the hearing.

When considering whether or not to invoke the Fifth Amendment privilege, practitioners should advise the client that the IJ may draw an adverse inference if the client chooses to remain silent.³⁰⁵ If a client wishes to invoke the Fifth Amendment, practitioners should consider filing a motion in limine seeking to prohibit questioning of the client about the underlying conduct based on the Fifth Amendment privilege, perhaps with 303 See 27 I&N Dec. at 210 (noting that the respondent "has not shown how his family circumstances would mitigate his history of drinking and driving" and noting that there could be situations where a family member's "influence over a young respondent's conduct could affect the likelihood that he would engage in future dangerous activity").

304 Even without pending criminal charges, there may be instances in which a client's Fifth Amendment rights are implicated. For example, if the plan is to file a motion to suppress evidence of alienage and contest the charges in the NTA, the practitioner should take care to ensure that no independent admissions of alienage are made at the bond hearing that could be used against the respondent in the removal proceedings to establish alienage. See supra section III.E (discussing the regulation that bond proceedings be kept separate and apart, as well as its potential limitations).

305 See, e.g., Baxter v. Palmigiano, 425 U.S. 308, 318 (1976) ("[T]he Fifth Amendment does not forbid adverse inferences against parties to civil actions when they refuse to testify in response to probative evidence offered against them. . ."); Gutierrez v. Holder, 662 F.3d 1083, 1091 (9th Cir. 2011) ("In a deportation hearing there is no prohibition against drawing an adverse inference when a petitioner invokes his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination.").

a letter from criminal defense counsel. If this is not successful, the practitioner should advise the client of the need to invoke the Fifth Amendment privilege in response to each question that could elicit incriminating information and prepare the client on how to do so.³⁰⁶ If the client has difficulty asserting this privilege, the practitioner could argue that this privilege can be invoked by the practitioner.³⁰⁷

The option of asserting the Fifth Amendment privilege must be balanced against the respondent's burden of proof in bond proceedings, including the burden to show that his or her release would not pose a danger. Current precedents allow an IJ to consider pending charges in the dangerousness analysis. Practitioners should consider how remaining silent might affect the respondent's burden of proof in bond hearings. This "catch-22" scenario demonstrates the harmful effect on respondents' rights when ICE chooses to arrest and detain an individual who is in the midst of criminal court proceedings. The individual is prevented from being able to face the criminal charges, sometimes is issued a warrant for failure to appear at the criminal proceeding, and is also prejudiced at the immigration bond hearing because of the pending charge that ICE prevented the respondent from confronting. Given President Trump's executive order and the implementing memorandum making those charged with crimes a priority, this situation may become more common. Practitioners should consider other ways besides the respondent's testimony to argue that the allegations are unreliable and should be afforded minimal weight.

Showing Lack of Dangerousness When DHS Introduces Harmful Allegations, in the Absence of Any Pending Charges or Criminal Convictions

In cases where DHS introduces harmful allegations or evidence of previous arrests, but there are no pending charges or convictions, practitioners may want to consider some of the strategies detailed in the sections above related to respondents with pending charges. For example, practitioners could contrast the proffered DHS evidence in the particular case from the "specific and detailed" evidence the BIA accepted in Guerra.

Practitioners can argue that the IJ's discretion is not so broad as to extend to conduct that does not lead to charges, unlike the facts of Guerra and Siniauskas where charges had been filed. In particular, practitioners can argue that evidence in bond hearings must meet the same standards for being probative and reliable that are applicable generally in removal proceedings, since this standard is grounded in the due process requirement of fundamental fairness.³⁰⁸ Practitioners may want to consider the common reasons why an arrest does not lead to a charge in making the argument that allegations related to an uncharged arrest should not be given weight. For example, perhaps the prosecuting agency could not pursue charges because there was insufficient evidence that a crime had been committed, or an informant recanted the allegations that formed the basis for the arrest. It may be worthwhile to investigate why the law enforcement office that arrested the client did not pursue charges.

If the arrest did not lead to formal charges, but did lead to a transfer to ICE, or if the arrest led to gang 306 The practitioner should help the client practice invoking the Fifth Amendment privilege. One strategy is to type out a sentence for the client to state and have him or her practice it many times.

307 See Matter of Sandoval, 17 I & N Dec. 70, 72 n.1 (BIA 1979) (finding that the Fifth Amendment privilege had been properly raised where the respondent stated that she did not "like to answer," counsel explained that the client was in fact invoking the privilege, and the client faced a "language barrier").

308 See, e.g., Matter of Y-S-L-C-, 26 I&N Dec. 688, 690 (BIA 2015) (citing the evidentiary standard applicable in removal proceedings).

allegations without formal charges, practitioners could reach out to the arresting law enforcement officer and request his or her presence at the bond hearing. This strategy may be useful where the circumstances of the arrest suggest that the underlying allegations were unfounded or pretextual. If the law enforcement officer does not agree to come voluntarily or does not respond to the request after a reasonable amount of time, the practitioner may wish to seek the immigration court's assistance by ordering a deposition or issuing a subpoena.³⁰⁹ If the law enforcement officer does not testify despite these efforts, practitioners could argue that the court should give no weight to the arrest report in the absence of the officer's testimony. Practitioners should only pursue this strategy if they conclude that the potential risks of having the officer testify outweigh the benefits, and should carefully prepare cross examination.

Practitioners should consider specific strategies to challenge the allegations' admission into evidence, or to argue that they should be given little weight. These arguments will depend on the nature of the documents the ICE OCC attorney introduces containing the allegations. In general, though, these arguments are based on the "fundamental fairness" standard for admission of evidence in removal proceedings – that is, arguing that the evidence is not probative or reliable. Some questions to consider include:

- What about the document makes it unreliable?³¹⁰
- Are there obvious factual errors?³¹¹
- Does the document lack detail?³¹²
- What is the source of the statements contained in the document?³¹³
- How was the document prepared or created? The ICE OCC attorney may not lay proper foundation for documents he or she seeks to introduce.
- Is the source for the document's statements identified or does the document rely on confidential

309 See 8 CFR §§ 1003.35(a) (providing that an IJ "may order the taking of deposition either at his or her own instance or upon application of a party"); 1003.35(b) (describing IJ subpoena authority). For information on the immigration court subpoena issuance process, see Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Ch. 4.20 (discussing subpoenas), Appendix N (providing sample subpoena).

310 See, e.g., Pouhova v. Holder, 726 F.3d 1007 (7th Cir. 2013) (remanding after determining that the government's evidence against the respondent should not have been admitted because it was unreliable and there was no opportunity to cross examine the documents' authors, where one statement was taken without an interpreter and another document memorializing a conversation was written seven years after the conversation happened); Lin v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, 459 F.3d 255, 269 (2d Cir. 2006) (concluding that consular report submitted by DHS was unreliable where it was based on the opinions of Chinese government officials who had "powerful incentives" not to be candid and lacked detail).

311 See, e.g., Alexandrov v. Gonzales, 442 F.3d 395, 407 (6th Cir. 2006) (noting that a government memorandum was unreliable because, among other things, it contained significant errors). But see, e.g., Jian Hui He v. Holder, 589 F. App'x 587, 589 (2d Cir. 2014) (unpublished) (upholding reliance on government document despite the fact that it "inaccurately identified [the petitioner] as female, given the accuracy of the other, more detailed identifying information, i.e., [petitioner's] name, date of birth, and passport number" (emphasis in original)).

312 See, e.g., Lin, 459 F.3d at 270; Ezeagwuna v. Ashcroft, 325 F.3d 396, 408 (3d Cir. 2003).

313 See, e.g., Lin, 459 F.3d at 272 (concluding that government document should have been excluded in part because the source of the information was "highly unreliable"); Ezeagwuna, 325 F.3d at 406 (concluding that it was a due process violation to rely on government documents that reported the statements of "declarants who are far removed from the evidence sought to be introduced").

informants or other undisclosed sources?³¹⁴

- Is ICE relying on evidence that the client is listed in a gang database? If so, can evidence be introduced to show that the gang database is unreliable?³¹⁵ For example, what “evidence” was relied on to justify the client’s inclusion in the database?
- Does the person making the allegations have a bias? For example, did racial profiling play a role in the stop, or is the complaining witness seeking U nonimmigrant status? In examining law enforcement officer bias, practitioners could investigate whether complaints have been filed against that particular officer and whether there is a pattern of race-based conduct.
- Is the proffered evidence irrelevant? For example, if DHS seeks to introduce generalized information not specific to the particular respondent, such as a flyer about the dangers of DUIs, the practitioner could object on relevance grounds and argue in the alternative that it should be afforded little weight.

Practitioners should make objections to the admission of DHS evidence when the evidence fails to meet the immigration court evidentiary standard, and argue in the alternative that even if the evidence is admitted, it should be afforded minimal weight.

Objections Based on Hearsay

Many types of allegations that DHS may seek to introduce to prove a respondent’s dangerousness may be in the form of hearsay, such as police reports or DHS memos of gang affiliation. Hearsay is an out-of-court statement used to prove the truth of the matter asserted.³¹⁶ Practitioners should analyze separately each layer of hearsay in a document and what arguments can be made against its admission into evidence. Unlike in federal court proceedings, in immigration court hearsay is generally admissible, and case law is supportive of the admission of hearsay statements such as police reports in the consideration of a respondent’s request for discretionary relief.³¹⁷

314 See, e.g., Banat v. Holder, 557 F.3d 886, 892 (8th Cir. 2009) (concluding that government evidence was unreliable in part because it relied on unidentified sources without any attempt to verify the claims made by the source or any showing of the qualifications or experience of the unidentified sources); Alexandrov, 442 F.3d at 407 (concluding that IJ should not have relied on Department of State report because it was unreliable, in part because it did not identify who the investigator was or what type of investigation was conducted).

315 For discussion of gang databases, see, for example, National Immigration Law Center, Untangling the Immigration Enforcement Web, at 10-12 (Sept. 2017), www.nilc.org/wp-content/uploads/2017/09/Untangling-Immigration-Enforcement-Web-2017-09.pdf [hereinafter “Untangling the Immigration Enforcement Web”]; Immigrant Legal Resource Center, Practice Advisory: Understanding Allegations of Gang Membership/Affiliation in Immigration Cases (Apr. 2017), www.ilrc.org/sites/default/files/resources/ilrc_gang_advisory-20170509.pdf [hereinafter “Understanding Allegations of Gang Membership”]. For specific strategies to combat gang allegations in immigration court, see Immigrant Defense Project, Challenging Evidence of Gang-Related Activity at Immigration Court Bond Hearings (Aug. 3, 2017), www.immigrantdefenseproject.org/wp-content/uploads/Practice-Note-8-3-17-gang-bond-hearings-1.pdf.

316 F. R. Evid. 801(c) (“Hearsay” means a statement that: (1) the declarant does not make while testifying at the current trial or hearing; and (2) a party offers in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted in the statement.”).

317 See, e.g., Carcamo v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 498 F.3d 94, 98 (2d Cir. 2007) (“[P]olice reports and complaints, even if containing hearsay and not a part of the formal record of conviction, are appropriately admitted for the purposes of considering an application for discretionary relief.”); Matter of Grijalva, 19 I&N Dec. 713, 722 (BIA 1998) (“[T]he admission into the record of the information contained in the police reports is especially appropriate in cases involving discretionary relief from deportation, where all relevant factors concerning an arrest and conviction should be considered to determine whether an alien warrants a favorable exercise of discretion.”).

However, hearsay evidence may be excluded if it is unreliable or its admission would otherwise be fundamentally unfair. Thus, practitioners should make particularized arguments about why the admission of the proffered ICE hearsay evidence would be fundamentally unfair, and argue in the alternative that if the immigration court decides to admit the hearsay evidence over the respondent's objection, it should be afforded minimal weight. Instead of or in addition to grounding the objection within a hearsay framework, the practitioner might also consider objecting, where appropriate, based on the source's lack of personal knowledge, speculation, improper lay witness opinion, conclusory statements, or attack the qualifications of any source the ICE OCC attorney tries to present as an "expert."

Arguments might challenge aspects of the hearsay evidence, such as:

- Lack of oversight and due process involved in creating the record (for example, in the gang database context), which make it unreliable³¹⁸
- If the document contains multiple levels of hearsay, this might provide strong support for arguments that the document is unreliable³¹⁹
- If the document relies on statements from an unnamed confidential source, it would be unfair to admit it given the impossibility of evaluating the reliability of the source
- If the respondent objects to the accuracy of the statements and ICE does not produce the source for cross examination, it would be unfair to admit them into evidence in light of the respondent's statutory right to "examine the evidence against [him or her] . . . and to cross-examine witnesses presented by the Government."³²⁰ To fully preserve this argument, practitioners should request to cross examine the source of the statements, including asking the court to issue a subpoena or seeking a deposition.³²¹
- The fact that there is no corroboration for the hearsay evidence³²² and, if true, that there is contrary

318 See Untangling the Immigration Enforcement Web, supra note 315, at 10-12; Understanding Allegations of Gang Membership, supra note 315.

319 See, e.g., Banat, 557 F.3d at 892 (concluding that government document should not have been relied on due to its lack of details and given that it contained "multiple levels of hearsay"); Lin, 459 F.3d at 272 (concluding that a document was unreliable in part because it "contain[ed] multiple levels of hearsay that exacerbate its myriad reliability problems"); Ezeagwuna, 325 F.3d at 406 (concluding that the BIA erred in relying on government document that contained "multiple hearsay of the most troubling kind").

320 INA § 240(b)(4)(B); see, e.g., Arias-Minaya v. Holder, 779 F.3d 49, 55 (1st Cir. 2015) (concluding that consideration of hearsay in police report was proper in part because "both the IJ and the BIA determined that use of the police report was not fundamentally unfair since the petitioner was given an opportunity to challenge its veracity and refute its contents"); Bondarenko v. Holder, 733 F.3d 899, 907 (9th Cir. 2013) (concluding that petitioner's due process rights were violated when the IJ refused to grant him a continuance to investigate a forensic report introduced by DHS at the hearing); Poubova v. Holder, 726 F.3d 1007, 1016 (7th Cir. 2013) (concluding that it was not fundamentally fair and in violation of petitioner's statutory rights to admit government's unreliable hearsay documents without giving her a reasonable opportunity to cross examine the source).

321 Practitioners should also consider the possible drawbacks of in-person testimony from a DHS witness in terms of how such testimony might weaken the respondent's case for bond. This will of course depend on the individual circumstances of the case.

322 See, e.g., Abbas v. Lynch, 647 F. App'x 671, 672 (9th Cir. 2016) (unpublished) (upholding reliance on reports where they were corroborated by testimony); Avila-Ramirez v. Holder, 764 F.3d 717, 724 (7th Cir. 2014) (finding error in giving "significant weight to uncorroborated arrest reports" where the respondent "denied any wrongdoing" and "was not prosecuted or convicted after these arrests, and there was no corroboration introduced at the immigration hearing"); Lanzas-Ramirez v. Att'y Gen., 508 F. App'x 885, 889 (11th Cir. 2013) (unpublished) (noting that the police report was corroborated by a police officer deposition summarizing interviews of alleged victims, in contrast to in Arreguin where the BIA "implicitly acknowledged . . . reliability concerns when it evidence in the record (submitted by the respondent).

This last point is particularly important. While the BIA has generally upheld admission of hearsay evidence such as arrest records and police reports in consideration of a respondent's application for discretionary relief,³²³ it has also suggested that independent corroborative evidence is required in order to justify giving such hearsay records substantial weight.³²⁴ For example, in one unpublished decision, the BIA remanded concluding that the gang affiliation evidence provided by DHS (a Facebook printout) was not sufficient to show that the respondent was a danger to the community and thus not amenable to release on bond.³²⁵ Thus, practitioners should argue that without corroborative evidence, hearsay allegations should be afforded minimal weight.

Where possible, practitioners should also present their own contrary evidence that establishes why the DHS evidence should be afforded minimal weight (and that also demonstrates why the respondent should be granted bond).³²⁶ Indeed, the BIA in Guerra specifically noted that "the respondent failed to present any evidence or argument that tended to undermine the reliability of the information contained in the complaint."³²⁷ Examples of contrary evidence might include a short declaration from the respondent refuting the allegations, a letter from the alleged victim or a witness discussing what really happened,³²⁸ or a declaration from a paralegal stating that he or she ordered records and they do not exist. Practitioners should consider asking a reputable person such as a law clerk to do an independent factual investigation of the allegations and present his or her findings in a declaration. In the alternative, if no third party is available to conduct the investigation, practitioners may consider whether the applicable rules of professional conduct permit the practitioner to conduct the investigation himself or herself and present the findings in a declaration.³²⁹ decided to give little weight to arrest reports that are not corroborated by other evidence" (internal quotations omitted)); Garces v. Att'y Gen., 611 F.3d 1337, 1350 (11th Cir. 2010) ("Absent corroboration, the arrest reports by themselves do not offer reasonable, substantial, and probative evidence that there is reason to believe Garces engaged in drug trafficking."); Matter of Arreguin, 21 I&N 38, 42 (BIA 1995).

323 See, e.g., Matter of Grijalva, 19 I&N Dec. at 722.

324 Matter of Arreguin, 21 I&N Dec. at 42 (affording an arrest record little weight where respondent denied smuggling allegations contained in an old arrest record, and "[c]onsidering that prosecution was declined and that there is no corroboration, from the applicant or otherwise").

325 Rigoberto Alfonso Sibrian, A095 707 745, 2010 WL 1976004, at *1 (BIA Apr. 23, 2010) (unpublished) (sustaining appeal and remanding to IJ to determine appropriate bond amount, where IJ considered DHS allegations, denied by respondent, that he was associated with a gang based on printout of respondent's Facebook page).

326 In preparing for the hearing, practitioners should consider whether it will benefit the client to cross examine the source of any derogatory information put forward by DHS. Practitioners should also think carefully about whether such testimony could further damage the respondent's case before seeking to question an adverse witness on the record. If the practitioner believes that cross examination of the source of the derogatory information would benefit the client, the practitioner should ask for the opportunity to cross examine the source and, if relevant, seek a subpoena from the IJ. In arguing for a subpoena or a deposition, practitioners might point out that under INA § 240(b)(4)(B), respondents have the right to examine the evidence against them and to cross examine the government's witnesses. Practitioners could argue that denying the respondent the opportunity to question the source of derogatory information and then relying on that derogatory information to reach a negative decision would violate notions of fundamental fairness.

327 24 I&N Dec. at 39.

328 Practitioners should be mindful of ethical rules and possible unintended consequences when seeking the participation of alleged victims. See discussion supra section IV.A.4 under subheading entitled "Hearing Preparation."

329 In particular, practitioners will want to look at ABA Model Rule 3.7 and its state law equivalents. Rule 3.7 prohibits, with some exceptions, lawyers from "act[ing] as advocate at a trial in which the lawyer is likely to be a necessary witness." ABA Model Rules of Professional Responsibility, Rule 3.7, www.americanbar.org/groups/professional_responsibility/publications/model_rules_of_professional_conduct/rule_3_7_lawyer_as_witness.html. Even if the practitioner determines that a dual witness-advocate

Note on Smuggling Allegations

As the Trump administration continues to emphasize smuggling-related conduct as an enforcement priority it is likely that the IJ or the ICE OCC attorney will ask the respondent questions about any smuggling history. When advising clients on how to respond to these questions, practitioners should consider how admissions relating to smuggling could affect the client's removal case or have criminal consequences.

In arguing that past smuggling-related conduct is not evidence of dangerousness, practitioners can remind the IJ that DHS has characterized smuggling as “a crime against a border” in contrast to human trafficking, which DHS has labeled as “a crime against a person.”³³⁰ Smuggling-related conduct is therefore more akin to a trespass to land violation, and not a dangerous criminal offense. Using DHS's own distinction, the IJ should therefore not factor past smuggling-related conduct into the dangerousness assessment.

B. BOND HEARING PRACTICE TIPS

As always, practitioners should review the Immigration Court Practice Manual, relevant Operating Policies and Procedures Memoranda,³³¹ and any local immigration court rules pertinent to bond hearings. Practitioners who have not recently handled a bond matter before the specific IJ may also wish to observe a bond hearing presided over by that IJ prior to the day of the bond proceeding. Local practices can change frequently, as can the practices of ICE OCC attorneys in terms of their opposition to bond or arguments about particular bond factors.

Practitioners should arrive early for the bond hearing and follow the immigration court's check-in procedures. Practitioners should be aware that they may have to wait several hours before the case is called, given that many immigration courts schedule a morning or afternoon group of cases all for the same start time.

Practitioners should notify any witnesses or other family or community members who plan to attend the bond hearing in advance about where and when to show up, and about local court procedures, such as passing through security and forms of identification needed. It is important that only those with lawful immigration status come to immigration court.³³² Practitioners may also want to provide attendees with guidance and specific examples role is permitted in the non-jury trial, administrative bond hearing context, he or she should be prepared for the IJ to strike the declaration since courts “disfavor[] attorney testimony regarding factual matters, contested or uncontested.” Whitted v. Gen. Motors Corp., 58 F.3d 1200, 1204 (7th Cir. 1995) (affirming, in a non-immigration court context, the lower court's decision to strike an attorney affidavit). But see, e.g., Heard v. Foxshire Associates, LLC., 806 A.2d 348 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 2002) (discussing the use of “at trial” in Rule 3.7 and concluding that the Maryland Rules of Professional Conduct distinguish between “at trial” and administrative hearings: “We further conclude that the MRPC does not preclude the giving of evidence by an attorney of record for a party before an administrative agency.”).

330 DHS Human Smuggling and Trafficking Center, Fact Sheet, Human Trafficking v. Human Smuggling (June 15, 2016), ctip.defense.gov/Portals/12/Documents/HSTC_Human%20Trafficking%20vs.%20Human%20Smuggling%20Fact%20Sheet.pdf?ver=2016-07-14-145555-320.

331 EOIR OPM are available on the EOIR website, www.justice.gov/eoir/opm-log (updated Jan. 17, 2018).

332 Even non-citizens present with some protection, such as deferred action, should be cautioned about the risks of posting bond at an ICE office. See, e.g., Mark Curnutte, ICE Detains Young Kentucky Mother Who Has Legal Status, USA TODAY, Aug. 23, 2017, www.usatoday.com/story/news/nation-now/2017/08/23/ice-detains-young-ohio-mother-who-has-legal-status/595355001/ (noting of appropriate and inappropriate attire. If possible, and if the practitioner believes there is a good chance the IJ will grant bond, the person who will be paying the bond (the obligor) could come to court ready to pay the bond, so that he or she can pay the bond immediately if the IJ grants the requested bond amount.³³³ If there are family or community members who attend the bond proceeding, the practitioner should point out their presence to the IJ at the beginning of the bond hearing. If the respondent is appearing by videoconference (called VTC), this should be done once the respondent appears on the screen, so that the respondent knows who is there and possibly gains confidence from seeing those present to support him or her.

Note on VTC Hearings. If the hearing will be conducted by VTC, practitioners should tell family and others who plan to attend about this and that they might not have a chance to speak with the respondent. Practitioners should also prepare the client for the VTC appearance and explain that he or she may only have a limited view of the courtroom. Practitioners should also discuss who else will be in the room, and what to do if the respondent and practitioner need to confer.

Remember that there is generally no requirement that bond proceedings be recorded; the practitioner, however, may wish to ask the IJ to record the bond hearing.³³⁴ Given that the bond proceeding may not be recorded, it is important that the practitioner or a colleague take careful notes throughout the proceeding, including of witness testimony, arguments made by DHS, and the IJ's questions, comments, and decision.

According to the Immigration Court Practice Manual, during the bond hearing DHS “should state whether a bond has been set and, if a bond has been set, the amount of the bond and the DHS justification for that amount.”³³⁵ The Practice Manual directs that the respondent or the respondent's representative “should make an oral statement (an ‘offer of proof’ or ‘proffer’) addressing whether the alien's release would pose a danger to property or persons, whether the alien is likely to appear for future immigration proceedings, and whether the alien poses a danger to national security.”³³⁶ The IJ may or may not allow witnesses to testify.³³⁷ If the IJ does not allow a witness to testify, it is important that the practitioner make an offer of proof that details what that witness would say if allowed to testify, in the event that the bond decision is appealed. The practitioner should prepare for the oral argument he or she will present as to why, under the governing legal framework, the client merits release on bond. The bond argument should generally be a maximum of a few minutes, after which the IJ may have specific questions. The practitioner should also be prepared to address any negative factors, such as prior convictions or pending criminal charges, and argue why the respondent nevertheless has established that he or she merits release.

During the bond hearing, DHS may introduce evidence or witnesses to support its position that the respondent should not be released on bond or that a high bond amount should be set. It is rare that DHS would present a witness at a bond hearing and in some cases may seek to prevent willing police officers from testifying³³⁸; that DACA holder was detained when she went to an ICE office to “post bond for another immigrant who was eligible for release”).

333 For more information about paying the bond, see section IV.C.1 infra.

334 See BALDINI-POTERMIN, supra note 244, § 4:32.

335 Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Ch. 9.3(e)(vi).

336 Id.

337 See id. (“At the Immigration Judge's discretion, witnesses may be placed under oath and testimony taken.”).

338 The authors know of one instance in Baltimore, Maryland during which the ICE OCC attorney informed the IJ that they had however, harmful DHS evidence is common, particularly if the individual has any criminal history. In order for the practitioner to best respond to and mitigate this evidence, he or she should prepare by gathering information and records in advance of the hearing.³³⁹ In addition to the mitigation strategies discussed above, practitioners should be prepared to object where warranted to the admission of DHS evidence on grounds that the evidence is not probative or reliable and its admission would be fundamentally unfair, and argue in the alternative that it should be afforded minimal weight.

The IJ will usually make an oral decision at the end of the bond hearing.³⁴⁰ The decision may be “based on any information that is available to the Immigration Judge or that is presented by the parties.”³⁴¹ The decision is not transcribed, but if a party appeals the IJ should prepare a written decision based on his or her notes. Failure by the IJ to prepare a written decision will lead to the BIA’s remanding the case to the IJ for the written decision, which will unnecessarily prolong the client’s detention.

C. POST BOND HEARING CONSIDERATIONS

1. Paying the Bond

After a bond has been set by either DHS or the IJ, the individual may be released once the bond amount has been paid.³⁴² The person paying the bond, called the “obligor,” must be at least 18 years old and have lawful immigration status.³⁴³ The obligor may pay the bond at any ICE office.³⁴⁴ It need not be the ICE office closest to where the individual is being detained.³⁴⁵ It is wise to call the local ICE office before making the trip to inquire about any local bond procedures or requirements, especially if the client is not detained near that office.

been in contact with the arresting police officer who had previously agreed to testify at the bond proceeding and that he would no longer be testifying. Practitioners who experience similar ICE OCC attorney obstruction should contact Michelle Mendez, co-author of this guide, at mmendez@cliniclegal.org.

339 See supra section IV.A.2.

340 Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Ch. 9.3(e)(vii).

341 Id. (referencing 8 CFR § 1003.19(d)).

342 8 CFR § 103.6. While this section is titled “Surety Bonds,” it encompasses both bonds secured by cash and bonds issued by surety companies. Because this regulation was issued by the former INS, it includes bonds that are not currently issued by ICE, such as public charge bonds and maintenance of status bonds.

343 See Nunez, supra note 244. Because DHS will ask for information about the obligor’s immigration status, see 74 Fed. Reg. 243 (Dec. 21, 2009), www.gpo.gov/fdsys/pkg/FR-2009-12-21/html/E9-30265.htm, it is best for a U.S. citizen or lawful permanent resident to pay the bond. See note 335 supra (reporting instance in which DACA-holding individual was detained by ICE when she went to post bond for someone else). Attorneys and legal representatives should be wary of agreeing to be the obligor in a client’s case. Representatives may be asked to do this when a client has no one willing or able to come forward as the obligor. It is important to carefully consult the applicable ethical rules to determine whether this course of action complies with rules of professional responsibility. In particular, practitioners should consider whether this scenario presents a conflict of interest given that the obligor has a financial interest in getting his or her bond money back, which will only happen if the client is deported or wins the case.

344 Cf. ICE ERO, Bond Management Handbook, at 23 (Aug. 19, 2014), AILA Doc. No. 16051730, www.aila.org/File/Related/16051730f.pdf [hereinafter “ERO Bond Management Handbook”].

345 A list of ICE bond acceptance facilities can be found at www.ice.gov/ice-ero-bond-acceptance-facilities (last updated Jan. 3, 2018). In situations where the individual is not detained in the same jurisdiction as the obligor, the obligor can pay the bond amount at the ICE office closest to where he or she lives. That ICE office communicates with the ICE office in the location where the individual is being detained and makes arrangements for release.

The obligor should bring proof of his or her lawful status and identity, the full amount of bond in the form of a money order, certified check, or cashier's check made out to "U.S. Department of Homeland Security,"³⁴⁶ a copy of the IJ order granting bond, as well as information about the detained individual including name, "A" number, location where detained, date and country of birth, nationality, date and manner of arrival, and contact information upon release.³⁴⁷ The obligor will have to complete ICE Form I-352, which asks for the aforementioned information, at the ICE office.³⁴⁸ After the obligor gives the completed Form I-352 and bond money to the ICE officer, the obligor will receive a copy of Form I-352 as well as a receipt for the bond amount.³⁴⁹ It is very important that the obligor keep these documents in a safe place in order to be able to recoup the bond money. The obligor should also notify ICE of any address changes.³⁵⁰ Once these steps are completed, the detained individual should be released from ICE detention. Even if DHS appeals the bond decision, the respondent can usually still pay the bond amount and be released; in some limited situations, however, the respondent may remain detained if DHS invokes a regulatory stay of the IJ's bond order in conjunction with a bond appeal.³⁵¹ If the individual is being detained in another state, ICE may require the obligor to provide proof that the individual has transportation from the detention facility to the place he or she will reside upon release.³⁵²

2. Result of Release on Bond

It is important to remind clients that achieving release on bond is not the same as resolving the underlying removal case. Getting released on bond has no legal effect on the underlying removal case, which will continue to proceed. Once a respondent is released from detention, his or her case may be moved from the immigration court's detained docket to a non-detained docket, which may slow the pace of proceedings and typically results in the assignment of a different IJ.³⁵³ DHS is supposed to "immediately advise" the immigration court of a respondent's release from custody,³⁵⁴ but this may not always happen. Some IJs prefer that the respondent's representative file a motion to transfer the case from the detained docket to the non-detained docket. If the respondent desires to change the venue of the removal proceedings upon release, he or she must file a motion 346 As a best practice, practitioners should confer with the ICE ERO office where the bond will be posted to confirm the accepted bond payment methods and procedures.

347 If the respondent is seeking to suppress evidence of alienage in the removal case, the obligor could note that the country of birth and nationality information provided is what the DHS has alleged.

348 Form I-352 is available on the ICE website, at www.ice.gov/sites/default/files/documents/Document/2017/i352.pdf.

349 See ERO Bond Management Handbook, supra note 344, at 5. Form I-352 contains instructions as well as the bond's general terms and conditions, which explain the parties' obligations under the bond agreement and identify events that automatically cancel the bond. While the ERO Bond Management Handbook does not expressly state that ICE ERO will provide a copy of Form I-352, ERO provides notice to the obligor of all the obligations via this form so a copy is necessary. The obligor should request a copy of Form I-352 if ICE ERO does not provide it.

350 This can be done via ICE Form I-333, Obligor Change of Address, at www.ice.gov/sites/default/files/documents/Document/2017/i333.pdf. Practitioners should explain the importance of keeping the address updated using Form I-333. In some circumstances, ICE may contact the bond obligor looking for the respondent, such as with a bag and baggage letter, and it can create problems for the respondent if the obligor's address is not current.

351 See infra section V.A.

352 See Nunez, supra note 244.

353 See Memorandum from MaryBeth Keller, Chief Immigration Judge, EOIR, Case Processing Priorities (Jan. 31, 2017), www.justice.gov/sites/default/files/pages/attachments/2017/01/31/caseprocessingpriorities.pdf (noting that detained individuals are a docketing priority, while most other categories of respondents are not).

354 8 CFR § 1003.19(g).

for a change of venue in the removal case, not the bond proceeding. If the practitioner only represents the client in the bond proceeding, it may be advisable for the client to file a pro se motion to change venue, although the practitioner should ensure that the client understands the process for filing and may wish to review the client's pro se filing. Practitioners should inquire about local immigration court practices and preferences.

It is important for practitioners to remind the client of his or her obligation to continue to appear in court, and that failing to appear will result in an in absentia order of removal. To ensure that the client is informed of any change in venue or hearing date, practitioners should file a change of address form, EOIR-33, with the immigration court within five days of the client being released (or after any other move), and serve a copy on ICE OCC. Clients should be reminded that if they change address at any time, the immigration court must be informed within five days of the change; clients should notify their representative immediately of any change of address. Additionally, practitioners and clients should regularly call the immigration court's automated information phone line—1-800-898-7180—to stay informed of any changes in the date or location of the next hearing.

3. Getting Bond Money Back at the Conclusion of the Removal Case

After the respondent's removal proceedings have concluded, either from being ordered removed or granted relief, the immigration bond should be cancelled and ICE should send a notice to the obligor on ICE Form I-391, Notice Immigration Bond Cancelled.³⁵⁵ It may also be possible to receive a bond refund if the respondent has returned to the home country without completing removal proceedings.³⁵⁶ If a respondent's case concludes through voluntary departure, the obligor may similarly obtain return of the bond money by following specified steps.³⁵⁷ If a respondent's case is administratively closed or the removal is stayed, ICE generally will not return the bond. However, there is variation in policy by some offices and officers, so the obligor could reach out to his or her local office seeking return of the bond money.

In practice, bond obligors may wish to contact ICE affirmatively to initiate the bond cancellation process. Once the obligor receives ICE Form I-391, he or she can send it along with a copy of the bond receipt and a letter requesting the refund to:

Debt Management Center
Attention: Bond Unit
P.O. Box 5000
Williston, VT 05495-5000

Telephone: (802) 288-7600

Fax: (802) 288-1226

355 For detailed information and tips on the bond refund process, see Michelle Mendez, CLINIC, Immigration Bond: How to Get Your Money Back, available in English and Spanish at cliniclegal.org/resources/immigration-bond-how-get-your-money-back. Much of the information provided in this subsection was obtained from the Mendez article.

356 See Mendez, supra note 355 (describing the process by which the obligor can seek rescission of the bond breach, reinstatement of the bond, and bond cancellation by proving that the respondent has departed).

357 See Mendez, supra note 355.

If the respondent fails to appear for removal proceedings or immigration appointments with ICE, the individual may be deemed a fugitive and in breach of the bond terms. In this scenario, ICE will send the obligor ICE Form I-340, Notice to Obligor to Deliver Alien, which demands that the obligor present the respondent at the ICE field office at a specific date and time. If the obligor does not comply with Form I-340's demands, ICE will send ICE Form I-323, Notice of Immigration Bond Breached. In this case the obligor will not receive a bond refund.

4. Voluntary Departure in Detention

A respondent may be granted voluntary departure without being released from detention.³⁵⁸ This process is sometimes referred to as voluntary departure “under safeguards.”³⁵⁹ If the respondent receives voluntary departure under safeguards, he or she may have to post the amount of the plane ticket with ICE by a certain date. The respondent should not be required to pay a separate bond if not being released from detention.³⁶⁰

5. Bond Revocation

The INA provides for the revocation of bond and re-arrest and detention of an individual “at any time.”³⁶¹ DHS can also raise a bond amount if there has been a change in circumstances since the IJ set the bond.³⁶² If DHS revokes bond and re-detains an individual, that person can seek redetermination of DHS's new custody decision with the IJ and, if necessary, appeal the IJ's decision to the BIA.

6. Second or Successive Requests for Bond Redetermination

The regulations provide that once a respondent has had an initial bond hearing, he or she may only be considered for a subsequent bond redetermination if his or her “circumstances have changed materially since the prior bond redetermination.”³⁶³ The request for a subsequent bond redetermination should be made in writing.³⁶⁴ A detained respondent can request a subsequent bond redetermination with the IJ even while the initial bond decision is on appeal to the BIA.³⁶⁵ The following factors have been found in unpublished BIA and IJ decisions

358 See Matter of M-A-S-, 24 I&N 762 (BIA 2009); see also Edwin Nunez Bencosme, A206 223 455 (BIA Oct. 4, 2016) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/328156619/Edwin-Nunez-Bencosme-A206-223-455-BIA-Oct-4-2016?utm_source=aila.org&utm_medium=InfoNet%20Search (“[A] respondent's desire to file an appeal in separate bond proceedings is not an appropriate factor on which to deny voluntary departure in the exercise of discretion.”).

359 Id.

360 See Matter of M-A-S-, 24 I&N at 767 (noting that “where continued detention is ordered, it makes no sense to require a bond, because the purpose of the bond—to assure that the respondent will appear for departure—is already fully served by the continued detention”); Antonio Ivarra, A205-506-209 (BIA June 20, 2016) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/318753711/Antonio-Ivarra-A205-506-209-BIA-June-20-2016?utm_source=aila.org&utm_medium=InfoNet%20Search (inappropriate to require voluntary departure bond for respondent granted voluntary departure without release from detention).

361 INA § 236(b); 8 CFR § 236.1(c)(9).

362 Matter of Sugay, 17 I&N Dec. 637 (BIA 1981).

363 See 8 CFR § 1003.19(e).

364 8 CFR § 1003.19(e).

365 Matter of Valles, 21 I&N Dec. 769 (BIA 1997) (holding that an IJ has continuing jurisdiction to consider a bond redetermination request while the previous bond redetermination is on appeal with the BIA).

to be material changes in circumstances and justify a subsequent bond redetermination request:

- The respondent has been granted relief from removal³⁶⁶The respondent, who had a DUI conviction, had shown rehabilitation including meeting attendance, remorse and willingness to abstain from similar behavior; the support of a sponsor who would help him in the rehabilitation process; and assurances from the respondent's U.S. citizen wife that she would take responsibility for driving him if that were necessary³⁶⁷
- Another detained individual in a virtually identical position as the respondent was released on bond and DHS did not appeal that decision³⁶⁸
- Practitioners have reported that IJs have considered the following changed circumstances: the fact that the respondent retained an attorney; a situation where pending charges were dropped and defense counsel provided a letter stating that the arrest was a case of mistaken identity; the filing of an application for immigration relief with USCIS, the issuance of an order in family court establishing eligibility for Special Immigrant Juvenile Status, obtaining a signed law enforcement certification for U nonimmigrant status, or other steps toward immigration relief; and family's proven inability to pay the bond set.

366 W-S-, AXXX XXX 991 (BIA Sept. 28, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/362583564/W-S-AXXX-XXX-991-BIA-Sept-28-2017.

367 M-R-R-A-, AXXX XXX 496 (BIA Apr. 25, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/349319390/M-R-R-A-AXXX-XXX-496-BIA-April-25-2017.

368 Wajid Ali Siddiqi, A095 473 104 (BIA Apr. 26, 2011) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/198852089/Wajid-Ali-Siddiqi-A095-473-104-BIA-April-26-2011. This highlights the benefit of frequent communication and sharing of recent outcomes with colleagues.

V. BOND APPEALS

A. LEGAL OVERVIEW OF BOND APPEALS

1. Bond Appeals Generally

As with other IJ decisions, either party can appeal a custody determination made by the IJ to the BIA.³⁶⁹ The Notice of Appeal must be filed with the BIA within 30 calendar days of the IJ decision.³⁷⁰ Unlike an appeal of a merits decision in removal proceedings, in bond proceedings a respondent cannot appeal the BIA decision to the federal appeals court via a petition for review.³⁷¹ However, federal district courts do have jurisdiction to consider habeas actions challenging the legality of an individual's detention in immigration custody.³⁷² While an IJ's custody decision is on appeal with the BIA, the IJ still has jurisdiction to reconsider the bond decision.³⁷³ The BIA Practice Manual specifies situations in which the BIA does not have authority to review a bond decision, which include:

- The respondent leaves the United States
- The respondent is granted relief by the IJ and DHS does not appeal, or is denied relief by the IJ and does not appeal
- The respondent is granted or denied relief by the BIA
- The respondent is released "on the conditions requested in the bond appeal" or "on conditions more favorable than those requested in the bond appeal," or 369 8 CFR §§ 1003.19(f), 236.1(d)(3)(1).

370 8 CFR § 1003.38(b). In contrast, in situations where the respondent is appealing DHS's decision regarding a request for amelioration of conditions made outside the seven-day period after release necessary for IJ review under 8 CFR § 236.1(d)(2), the respondent has ten days to file an appeal of DHS's decision with the BIA. 8 CFR § 236.1(d)(3)(ii); BIA Practice Manual Ch. 7.3(a)(ii)(B), www.justice.gov/eoir/board-immigration-appeals-2 ("In the limited instances in which the Board has jurisdiction over the appeal from a DHS bond decision, the deadline for filing an appeal is ten days from the date of the DHS bond decision.") [hereinafter "BIA Practice Manual"].

371 INA § 236(e) (stating that "[t]he Attorney General's discretionary judgment regarding the application of this section shall not be subject to review" and that "[n]o court may set aside any action or decision by the Attorney General under this section regarding the detention or release of any alien or the grant, revocation, or denial of bond or parole").

372 See infra section II.B; Demore v. Kim, 538 U.S. 510, 516–17 (2003); Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678, 686–88 (2001).

373 Matter of Valles, 21 I&N Dec. 769 (BIA 1997).

- The IJ grants a subsequent request for bond redetermination and DHS does not appeal.³⁷⁴

As with other types of appeals, in a bond appeal the BIA will not consider new evidence that was not submitted to the IJ.³⁷⁵ The BIA applies a “clearly erroneous” standard of review to all factual findings made by an IJ.³⁷⁶ The BIA reviews all questions of law, discretion, and judgment and all other issues on appeal de novo.³⁷⁷ In general, practitioners may have more success with arguments about legal errors rather arguing that the IJ should have weighed the evidence differently in his or her discretion. Examples of legal error would include the IJ taking a prosecutorial role, misrepresenting the record, failing to conduct an individualized hearing, and failing to consider positive Guerra factors.

The regulations allow DHS to seek a stay of the IJ’s custody determination pending a BIA appeal, which if granted would prevent the individual from being released pursuant to the IJ’s bond decision during the pendency of the BIA appeal. However, if DHS does not seek a stay, the filing of a bond appeal “shall not operate to delay compliance with the [IJ’s bond] order . . . nor stay the administrative proceedings or removal.”³⁷⁸ As described below, the regulations contemplate an automatic stay in some circumstances, and allow for a discretionary stay in other circumstances.

2. Automatic Stays of an IJ’s Bond Decision

The automatic stay provision is triggered “[i]n any case in which DHS has determined that an alien should not be released or has set a bond of $10,000 or more.”³⁷⁹ In automatic stay cases, the IJ custody order “shall be stayed upon DHS’s filing of a notice of intent to appeal the custody redetermination (Form EOIR-43) with the immigration court within one business day of the order.”³⁸⁰ DHS has discretion to file or not file Form EOIR-43, such that even though this type of stay is labeled “automatic,” the bond decision will not be stayed if DHS does not trigger a stay by filing Form EOIR-43 within one day of the IJ decision.³⁸¹ The regulations direct that the BIA “avoid unnecessary delays in completing the record for decision” in automatic stay cases.³⁸² If the automatic stay is invoked, the IJ bond decision remains “in abeyance pending decision of the appeal by the Board.”³⁸³ The following exceptions allow for the automatic stay to lapse:

- If DHS does not file a notice of appeal with the BIA within 10 business days of the IJ custody order.³⁸⁴ To preserve the automatic stay, DHS must identify the appeal as an automatic stay case, and file with the notice of appeal a certification by a “senior legal official” that he or she has approved the appeal filing

374 BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 7.2(c). The occurrence of these same conditions may render a pending BIA appeal moot. Id. Ch. 7.4.

375 Id. Ch. 4.8.

376 See 8 CFR § 1003.1(d)(3)(i); Matter of R-S-H-, 23 I&N Dec. 629, 637 (BIA 2003).

377 8 CFR § 1003.1(d)(3)(ii).

378 8 CFR § 236.1(d)(4).

379 8 CFR § 1003.19(i)(2).

380 Id.

381 See id. (“The decision whether or not to file Form EOIR-43 is subject to the discretion of the Secretary.”).

382 8 CFR § 1003.6(c)(3).

383 8 CFR § 1003.19(i)(2).

384 8 CFR § 1003.6(c)(1).

“according to review procedures established by DHS” and “is satisfied that the contentions justifying the continued detention of the alien have evidentiary support, and the legal arguments are warranted by existing law or by a non-frivolous argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing precedent or the establishment of new precedent.”³⁸⁵

- If the BIA has not issued a decision within “90 days after the filing of the notice of appeal.” The 90-day period is tolled if the respondent receives a requested briefing extension, for the same number of days as the briefing extension is granted.³⁸⁶

DHS can prevent a stay from automatically lapsing after 90 days by filing a motion for a discretionary stay.³⁸⁷ The motion must be filed “at a reasonable time before the expiration of the period of the automatic stay.”³⁸⁸ If DHS timely files such a motion and the BIA fails to issue a decision on the motion before the 90-day period ends, the stay remains in effect for up to 30 additional days while the BIA decides DHS’s discretionary stay motion.³⁸⁹

If the BIA issues a decision authorizing release, denies DHS’s motion for a discretionary stay, or does not act on a discretionary stay motion during the automatic stay period, the respondent’s release is automatically stayed for another five business days.³⁹⁰ During those five business days, DHS may refer the custody case to the Attorney General. If it does so, the individual’s release is “stayed pending the Attorney General’s consideration of the case,” but the automatic stay expires 15 business days after the case is referred to the Attorney General.

Several federal district courts have held that a previous version of the automatic stay regulation violated the respondent’s due process rights.³⁹¹

3. Discretionary Stays of an IJ’s Bond Decision

The regulations also give the BIA discretion to stay an IJ’s custody order upon DHS’s motion for a discretionary stay in connection with a DHS appeal of a bond decision.³⁹² DHS can seek a discretionary stay “at any time” in connection with a BIA bond appeal.³⁹³

385 8 CFR § 1003.6(c)(1)(i)-(ii). The regulations also provide that the IJ must prepare a written decision within five business days after the IJ is advised that DHS has filed a notice of appeal in such cases. See 8 CFR § 1003.6(c)(2) (noting that in “exigent circumstances” and with the approval of the BIA a five-day extension may be permitted, and that the court “shall prepare and submit the record of proceedings without delay”).

386 8 CFR § 1003.6(c)(4).

387 8 CFR § 1003.6(c)(5) (“DHS may seek a discretionary stay pursuant to 8 CFR § 1003.19(i)(1) to stay the immigration judge’s order in the event the Board does not issue a decision on the custody appeal within the period of the automatic stay.”)

388 Id.

389 Id.

390 8 CFR § 1003.6(d).

391 See, e.g., Zabadi v. Chertoff, No. C 05-01796, 2005 WL 1514122 (N.D. Cal. June 17, 2005) (unpublished) (also concluding that the regulation was ultra vires); Zavala v. Ridge, 310 F. Supp. 2d 1071 (N.D. Cal. 2004); Ashley v. Ridge, 288 F. Supp. 2d 662 (D.N.J. 2003). But see, e.g., Pisciotto v. Ashcroft, 311 F. Supp. 2d 445 (D.N.J. 2004). These decisions predated the current regulation found at 8 CFR § 1003.6(c) which contains the 90-day automatic lapse provision.

392 8 CFR § 1003.19(i)(1).

393 Id.

B. NUTS AND BOLTS OF THE BOND APPEAL PROCESS

1. Initial Considerations Prior to Filing the Appeal

As is true for any appeal from an immigration court ruling, it is crucial that practitioners build a strong record before the IJ in order to maximize the chances of success. A strong record may include substantial documentation establishing lack of dangerousness, absence of flight risk, and the respondent's community ties and other equities. Given that bond proceedings may not be recorded and no transcript will be created for the appeal, it is also important that the practitioner (or a colleague) take careful notes of the discussion that occurs during the bond hearing, including the substance of any testimony, attorney and IJ discussion during the hearing, and the IJ's oral decision. At the conclusion of the bond hearing, if there is any chance that the respondent may wish to appeal, the practitioner should reserve appeal.

2. Filing the Bond Appeal

The BIA Practice Manual is a must-read source of information and instructions on how to prepare an appeal. Particularly relevant portions include Chapter 3 (Filing with the Board), Chapter 4 (Appeals of IJ Decisions), Chapter 7 (Bond), and the appendices that provide sample documents.

The BIA appeal, filed on Form EOIR-26, Notice of Appeal,³⁹⁴ must be received at the BIA within 30 calendar days of the IJ's decision.³⁹⁵ With the exception of appeals of voluntary departure bonds, there is no filing fee for bond appeals.³⁹⁶ Practitioners should not mix the bond appeal with the appeal of any other matter, such as the merits decision. Instead, the bond appeal should be filed separately on Form EOIR-26.³⁹⁷ A complete bond appeal filing packet includes a cover page, Form EOIR-26, Form EOIR-27 (Notice of Entry of Appearance as Attorney or Representative Before the Board of Immigration Appeals) if the respondent is represented on the appeal,³⁹⁸ and any supporting documentation. All forms should be completed in full, including proper signatures and completed proof of service. The packet should be two-hole punched at the top.³⁹⁹

In completing Form EOIR-26, practitioners should carefully read and follow the form's instructions, which are 394 In contrast, Form EOIR-29 is used to appeal a DHS decision. BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 7.3(a)(i).

395 BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 3.1(a)(i) ("For appeals and motions that must be filed with the Board, the appeal or motion is not deemed 'filed' until it is received at the Board." (emphasis in original)); supra section V.A (discussing appeal deadline).

396 BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 7.3(a)(iii).

397 BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 4.4(b)(v)(A) (directing that "[e]ach Immigration Judge decision must be appealed separately"); id. Ch. 7.3(a)(i) (noting that bond appeal "must not be combined with an appeal of a decision regarding the alien's removal or deportation" (emphasis in original)).

398 The representative must complete Form EOIR-27 even if he or she was the respondent's representative below and there is a Form EOIR-28 on file with the immigration court. See BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 2.1(b)(i). Form EOIR-27 can be found on the EOIR website at www.justice.gov/eoir/list-downloadable-eoir-forms. For unrepresented respondents, the Florence Project's website contains a number of useful pro se resources and guides, available at firp.org/resources/prose/ (last updated May 2013). See, e.g., Florence Project, Appealing Your Case to the Board of Immigration Appeals (May 2013), firp.org/media/BIA-Appeal-Guide-2013_new-BIA-address-2013.pdf.

399 BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 3.3(c)(viii).

available on the EOIR website.⁴⁰⁰ In particular, Question 6 directs that the appealing party “[s]tate in detail the reason(s) for this appeal.” In the response box, or in an attachment filed with the form, the practitioner should lay out specific and detailed bases for the appeal and identify the error(s) made by the IJ.⁴⁰¹ Specific reasons should be given even if the practitioner plans to file a brief.⁴⁰² Question 8 asks if the appealing party “intend[s] to file a separate written brief or statement after filing” the EOIR-26. Practitioners should only check “yes” if they indeed plan to file a brief. If an appealing party checks “yes” and then does not submit a brief without notifying the BIA, this is grounds for summary dismissal of the appeal.⁴⁰³ Note that a well-written brief is a persuasive advocacy tool and a good idea for any appeal to the BIA. In general, practitioners should take care to follow all instructions, including deadlines, signatures, proof of service, and careful completion of the forms, in order to avoid rejection by the BIA.⁴⁰⁴ The completed appeal packet should be mailed to the BIA at the following address:

Board of Immigration Appeals
Clerk’s Office
5107 Leesburg Pike, Suite 2000
Falls Church, VA 22041

Practitioners should send the appeals packet with ample time before the deadline and use a form of mail that includes a delivery confirmation. Practitioners must serve a copy of the filing on the ICE OCC office that represented DHS during the bond hearing.⁴⁰⁵

3. Appeal Brief, Processing, and Decision

Within several weeks after the appeal has been filed, the BIA will typically issue a filing receipt.⁴⁰⁶ The BIA will also mail the parties the IJ’s memorandum of bond decision, which is written by the IJ once an appeal notice has been filed.⁴⁰⁷ Unlike merits appeals, in bond appeal cases the BIA will likely not issue a transcript.⁴⁰⁸ Even though the practitioner will not have the benefit of a transcript, if the IJ recorded the bond proceeding, the 400 The Form EOIR-26 is available for download on the EOIR website, www.justice.gov/eoir/file/eoir26/download.

401 See BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 4.16(b) (failure to specify the grounds for an appeal is grounds for summary dismissal of the appeal).

402 One practitioner noted that on bond appeals where the practitioner indicates that he or she will file a brief, it is sufficient to write a short summary such as: “The IJ erred in denying bond because the totality of the evidence demonstrated that Respondent was not a danger to the community or a risk of flight. The IJ misapplied the factors in Matter of Guerra and disregarded evidence of equities and rehabilitation.”

403 See BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 4.16(b)-(d) (noting grounds for summary dismissal); see also id. Ch. 4.7(e) (specifying process for filing a “briefing waiver” with the BIA prior to the brief deadline to inform the BIA if the appealing party decides not to file a brief).

404 See BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 3.1(c).

405 See BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 3.2 (discussing service requirements for BIA filings).

406 See BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 3.1(d)(i) (“If a filing receipt is not received within approximately two weeks, parties may call the Automated Case Information Hotline for current information on appeals or the Clerk’s Office for current information on appeals or motions.”).

407 Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 2, Ch. 9.3(e)(vii).

408 See BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 4.2(f)(ii) (noting that “[t]ranscripts are not normally prepared” in bond determination appeals).

practitioner can request a CD of the audio recording with the local immigration court.⁴⁰⁹

If the practitioner indicated on the Form EOIR-27 that he or she planned to file a brief, the BIA will mail a briefing schedule. In detained cases, the parties are typically given 21 calendar days from the date of the briefing schedule notice to simultaneously brief the appeal.⁴¹⁰ In detained cases, if a party wishes to file a response to the other side's brief, the BIA will accept such a brief "within fourteen days after expiration of the briefing schedule," but will not delay adjudication of the appeal in anticipation of such a brief.⁴¹¹ On request, the BIA will usually grant one briefing extension in detained cases, of 21 additional days.⁴¹² Practitioners will need to carefully consider and discuss with the client how a bond appeal timeline will map onto the timeline of the detained merits case. While the bond appeal progresses, the detained client will often be pushed to move ahead with the merits hearing on any immigration relief. It may be difficult to get a decision in the bond appeal before the individual hearing. If the goal is to obtain a bond appeal decision before the merits hearing, practitioners could consider strategies such as preparing a draft bond appeal brief before the written IJ bond decision is received, foregoing a briefing extension, and/or writing a shorter bond appeal brief in order to save time.

A complete brief filing packet will include:

- BIA briefing notice (stapled on top of the cover page)
- Cover page
- Brief, which should be signed by the preparer with his or her EOIR ID number and include the respondent's "A" number on the cover page and on the bottom right corner of each subsequent page, and
- Proof of service.

For detailed instructions about the format and contents of BIA briefs, practitioners should consult the BIA Practice Manual, particularly Chapter 4.6. The practitioner should be sure to send the brief to ensure it arrives prior to the briefing deadline.

While the BIA will not issue a briefing receipt, practitioners can keep track of BIA appeals by calling the BIA Clerk's Office.⁴¹³ The timeline for BIA bond appeals can vary, but at the time of this guide's issuance 409 Id. (directing that the practitioner "[c]ontact the Clerk's Office or the local Immigration Court to make arrangements to listen to the digitally recorded hearings"): see also id. Ch. 4.6(d)(vii) (providing the citation format for the audio recording where a transcript is not prepared).

410 BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 4.7(a)(ii). In non-detained cases (which could be relevant to a bond appeal where DHS appeals the IJ's custody determination and no stay of the custody determination has issued), the parties are typically given 21 calendar days each, to be filed sequentially. Id. Ch. 4.7(a)(i).

411 BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 4.7(a)(ii). If a practitioner intends to file a reply brief, it is recommended that the reply be filed with a cover letter that discusses the aforementioned section of the Practice Manual. Reply briefs are not typical in BIA cases and many cases will not require a reply. In considering whether to file a reply, practitioners should ask whether any of DHS's arguments require a response or whether they have already been covered by the existing arguments.

412 BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 4.7(c)(i)(B). The 21 days are added to the original deadline and apply to both parties. Unless and until a briefing extension request is granted, the original deadline applies and practitioners should file any extension request well in advance of the briefing deadline. See id. Ch. 3.1(b)(vi) ("A pending extension request does not excuse a party from meeting a filing deadline.").

413 BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 1.6(b) (providing automated hotline information for certain inquiries); Appendix B practitioners were reporting a three- to five-month time frame in bond appeal cases from filing of Form EOIR-26 to BIA decision. The BIA will serve a copy of its decision on the parties by regular mail.⁴¹⁴ In a situation where DHS appeals a favorable IJ bond decision, practitioners should apply the appropriate standard of review and vigorously defend the IJ's decision in briefing to the BIA.

(Directory).

414 BIA Practice Manual, supra note 370, Ch. 7.3(b)(iii).

VI. CONCLUSION

As the use of immigration detention continues to increase, it is more important than ever that representatives understand the legal framework governing bond proceedings in order to harness that knowledge toward zealous and well-prepared advocacy on behalf of detained respondents. Successful bond representation can make all the difference in whether a respondent is able to secure release and ultimately prevail on the merits of his or her case. Effective representation in bond proceedings also helps to safeguard the due process rights of detained respondents. The authors encourage practitioners to consider pro bono opportunities available in their jurisdiction or remotely, such as through the Immigrant Justice Campaign,⁴¹⁵ which not only help meet a compelling need but can also provide practitioners with experience and mentoring. Given the ever-changing landscape of immigration detention, practitioners are encouraged to remain connected to others doing bond work in order to share information about the latest trends, successful strategies, and best practices. Finally, the authors wish to remind readers that this guide is intended for general educational use only and that practitioners should independently research the law governing their jurisdiction, as this area of law (like many in the immigration field) is complex and frequently changing.

For sample materials, visit cliniclegal.org/resources/bond-guide.

⁴¹⁵ More information about the Immigrant Justice Campaign is available at immigrationjustice.us/.

The Catholic Legal Immigration Network's commitment to defending the vulnerable

The Catholic Legal Immigration Network, or CLINIC, advocates for humane and just immigration policy. Its network of nonprofit immigration programs—300 organizations in 47 states and the District of Columbia—is the largest in the nation.

In response to growing anti-immigrant sentiment and to prepare for policy measures that will hurt immigrant families, CLINIC launched the Defending Vulnerable Populations Project. The project's primary objective is to increase the number of fully accredited representatives and attorneys who are qualified to represent immigrants in immigration court proceedings. To accomplish this, the Defending Vulnerable Populations Project conducts court skills training for both nonprofit agency staff (accredited representatives and attorneys) and pro bono attorneys; develops practice materials to assist legal representatives; advocates against retrogressive policy changes; and expands public awareness on issues faced by vulnerable immigrants.

By increasing access to competent, affordable representation, the project's initiatives focus on protecting the most vulnerable immigrants—those at immediate risk of deportation.

The Defending Vulnerable Populations Project offers a variety of resources including timely practice advisories on removal defense tactics, amicus briefs before the Board of Immigration Appeals and U.S. Courts of Appeals and pro se materials to empower the immigrant community. Examples of these include a practice advisory entitled "Strategies to Combat Government Efforts to Terminate Unaccompanied Child Determinations" (May 2017), an amicus brief on the "serious nonpolitical crime" bar to asylum as it relates to youth filed with the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit and an article in Spanish and English on how to get back one's immigration bond money.

Get free resources to help you defend immigrants at cliniclegal.org/defending-vulnerable-populations!

“

As the use of immigration detention continues to increase, it is more important than ever that representatives understand the legal framework governing bond proceedings in order to harness that knowledge toward zealous and well-prepared advocacy on behalf of detained respondents. Successful bond representation can make all the difference in whether a respondent is able to secure release and ultimately prevail on the merits of his or her case. Effective representation in bond proceedings also helps to safeguard the due process rights of detained respondents.

”

ABOUT THE CATHOLIC LEGAL IMMIGRATION NETWORK, INC.

CLINIC provides vital legal resources, guidance, and support to a network of more than 330 legal, community-based and Catholic immigration programs across the country. CLINIC affiliates are in 47 states, with 1,200 attorneys and accredited representatives, who in turn assist hundreds of thousands of vulnerable and low-income immigrants each year. In addition to legal and program capacity building assistance, CLINIC conducts national-level administrative advocacy and provides state and local support to affiliates on the ground combating anti-immigrant legislation.

CATHOLIC LEGAL
IMMIGRATION
NETWORK, INC.